To Know The Father Means Relationship

Dedication

This message is dedicated to the Father.
He has provided the strength to present it with courage.

Thank You

There are two brothers who have lifted up these arms.
Thank you for listening and staying the course. The Father is with you!

Yahseph

Mikhael

Much thanks to Yahshar for his continued support through the years.

Special thanks to Aharon who helped initiate this message in Spring 2016.

If it was not for my mother and father who helped kept me focused all these years, none of this would have happened—am grateful for their faith and wisdom.

My three sisters provided consistent encouragement throughout.
Love them all.

“Giving yourself to another is the essence of extension.”

Introduction

7/6/2019

Trust and Relationship. These two words sum up this great experience.

This experience started since birth. It has been fascinating to look back to see the moments which lead up to this point. Clues were left here and there, planting vital keys which would slowly unlock a destined path.

In the early years as a child, was surrounded by expressions which captured the Father's voice, primarily the scriptures (this message refers to its words as the script). This coincided with an interaction with what is known as Star Wars.

The earliest memories of Star Wars were at five to six years old. Remember my father allowing me to walk inside a small room in Sears by myself at night, seeing it completely stacked with vintage toys. Remember catching glimpse of the brand new VHS release of Return of the Jedi in KB Toys—as well as a local Gemco (a retail store taken over by Target in November 1986) scattering Star Wars figures all over the floor at discounted prices. These moments are seared within.

This was met by the many Christian music records my parents purchased and played throughout my first fifteen years. It was hard to understand why songs such as Dallas Holm's "He'll Dry the Tears", Harvest's "Stand", and Don Francisco's "Messengers From Heaven" touched me at such an early age—now it becomes so clear.

Years later, when getting ready to graduate from High School, was led to cross paths with two online strangers (one being Aharon, who introduced me) in April 1999. This allowed a presence to be known, a five-letter handle that would eventually lead a group of people to establish a community. This group, which noted truths within the fictitious Jedi in Star Wars, slowly began to unite under a similar cause.

For reasons later understood, the Father had placed me before the rest, allowing this flesh to sow seeds that would eventually relate this message to a lost, confused generation.

Things went well until a prophetic dream in October 2000. This person dreamt about a house in the middle of a desert—within the house was a small meeting of people. As the discussion continued, there began disagreements. Eventually, this person was shunned and left the house. Time passed. A calling was given came back in order to look inside a window—inside were armies of clones which marched like machines. While walking away, noticed in the back of the house a junkyard (large pieces had been thrown outside of the house). When touching these pieces, a jewel was found within them and they were revived as people. A very small, dedicated group of individuals were formed and eventually surrounded the house. When surrounded, the group called fire out of heaven. The fire destroyed the house to its very foundation.

At the time, didn't know what it meant—was greatly bothered by it. Was about to make a decision to leave yet other members convinced this person to stay. Eventually, though, this was found to be exactly what would happen in the future.

Sometime later, a media incident happened in March 2001 which would forever shape the direction of a community, pushing it towards a religious movement. The adversary flashed power and influence in the eyes, all to make compromise of one's faith. The dream was again remembered; the offer was quickly turned down. The Father has given remembrance of this decision as it brings him content.

Since that time, the tares began to grow and pull an individual down towards a slow, growing tiredness and depression. A spirit began to break. By July 2006, had provided a last comment and became an online hermit.

He allowed this person to hide. It didn't take long for people to quickly forget and replace what had happened. History was rewritten for a more convenient set of events.

For the next ten years, the Father began to strip away the preconceptions of the past. Starting with meeting a dearest friend (Yahseph) a year after the departure, he brought down this weak clay to the lowest state in order to rebuild. This person then remembered a challenge given some years prior—was led to read the scriptures from cover to cover, and then again with more diligence. Truths were revealed. The Star Wars items around the bedroom slowly lost significance. They were eventually put away. A spirit, gradually, was renewed.

Lost in translation, the Father began to guide his servant towards truth. Many nights there were cries. Eventually was humbled to a state this person could be transformed to perform a task. He showed me that my doctrines, however noble, were vain. What he needed from me was obedience—to simply listen and do what he says.

When all that remained of the previous shell was let go, the Father revealed a great truth in his word. An epiphany (eureka) movement came about—the scriptures opened and a persona was realized.

It was always there. It was simply hidden until that very moment.

That is when he began to call out to this piece of clay. By March 2014, was convicted and began to let go of enjoyable conveniences. This was further triggered by an old friend (Aharon) who was broken and confused by those who had beaten him down. There we were again, brought full circle.

At first, thought it best to revive the original website we had once started. Yet, as this person stated to gaze inside the community, legions of fallen ones were seen. For two years this person tested them and found the obvious. The dream was being fulfilled in real time.

How would it work out this time around? Would one finally make the right decision?

That is when this message came. It started quickly with a surprising boldness, first presented in a personal video conversation on March 2016. At first, the message had no name, as was still hesitant. Yet, gradually, its name was revealed. The message led us to a thirty hour, fifty part video series which lasted until March 2017.

Although this message was given out prematurely to the community before its completion, it created a fire that could not be quenched. People called to this message were further challenged. It was purposely made hard to test hearts over minds—for only the chosen and humble were sought after.

In May 2017, was convicted to create another series called SwordFire. Although it presented great truths, found its targeted audience was not one the Father desired. By October that same year, was brought again to another crossroads.

Months passed. Things began to get quiet and thought my task had been completed. That is when the illness hit. And that is where this writing begins.

This person is still very hesitant to present this. It has been difficult to see how nearly everyone who has encountered this message has rejected it at some point, either in full or in part. Although it has taken a man a decade to come to terms with it, this person still struggles upon its realization. This is because the message deals with humility and servitude. It does not regard the altruistic behaviour one religiously, politically, or socially pushes in public—nor does it favor the pompous.

Pomp is such a horrid condition. It is one of the most dangerous vices known to man. This and other dark strains cling to our habitual lives in order to disable us from hearing the Father's voice. This is why so many are too busy building tall towers for themselves. Until we stop upon the stray paths we are treading, and actually listen to the calling, we will not learn of the true path.

This message comes from the Father. He speaks of the way of life and how it must be separated from the strays of death. There are many, many ways to stray from his path—those ways will always lead to death. Yet for those stay on target—he will reveal himself.

My sincere hope is for the Father will reveal himself to you in this message. If you hear this message... he is talking to you.

Be blessed.

The Message

1/29/2018

After being ill for two weeks, have come to realize it was time to come back to the message of Jedihood. There is a powerful message which needs to be given.

This message initially started two years ago as a thirty-hour series, with a one year backstory prior. The series started as conversations between Aharon (also known as Streen) and Yahunatan (formally known as Relan Volkum). Since that time, both people have changed. Yet the message has remained the same.

Jedihood is such an important message that to not speak of it would be torture. It is the result of a journey that has taken a person from an online presence, to a secluded hermit... to eventually a prophetic quest.

Many use the word prophecy in the grandest sense—yet it is simply a revelation, a divine utterance. Not a prediction or forecast as it is usually seen, yet a truthful message of what is—and a warning of what is to come.

The message of Jedihood is that of a rod. It will lightly tap on those who earnestly seek its calling, yet will strongly goad those who do not have ears to hear. It is a reflection of the standard that has always been there—we are just too busy to keep ourselves from noticing it.

It is this very standard which measures this person today. Can a person remain silent of such a thing?

Hearing Comes By Doing

2/3/2018

The ringing earache in the right ear (after the flu illness) has taught of the importance of hearing. By hearing, we are able to follow instructions. We quiet ourselves and how we think things need to play out to hear the greater calling.

You see, this world is the theater—the theater of the universe. And how we act in this life is not just seen by those upon this earth, yet those beyond it.

Many of us are being called to participate in a play. How will we act? That depends on how we follow the director... and the script he has provided for us.

The script (scriptures) is a guide, a compass for those who truly seek to learn of their roles. By learning, we find out who we are and how to respond accordingly. Yet, as we participate in the task, it is especially important to learn the way of the director. How does he want us to perform?

This requires a personal relationship. It takes daily commitment, practice—sincerity, humility. It takes a listening spirit who is willing to not only take orders, yet fulfill them.

Many people think the director is unreasonable. That he is overbearing and restrictive. Yet the truth is he is there to tell a story—to set up actors and locations. If we only learned to obey his voice, to listen to his cues, and to do what he says for us to do, we would begin to understand our true purpose.

Yet we are so quick to argue, to give our opinions on how things should work. It is this rebelliousness which gets us into trouble.

Hearing comes by doing. By obeying the ways of life, and humbly following the path that has been destined before us, we are able to accomplish great things in his name.

Instead of fighting with the director and self-interpreting how things should play out, simply do what he says. He is watching you, greatly desiring to capture your best performance. He will also remove the scenes you aren't too happy about.

Yet it takes commitment. It takes a relationship.

You see, this ringing in the ear is stressful, yet it has taught me the importance of looking for his signs—seeing and hearing his cue signals, paying attention to his direction. It is a reminder that although one may be a seasoned performer, if one tried to do things their way, trouble will come about every time.

Allow the director to direct your life.

Revealing

2/9/2018

Sadly woke up this morning to find the Jedihood YouTube site has been removed. Not sure how it happened as did not receive notifications, although know this person is simply being tested at this time.

There is no coincidence. Things are being revealed—simply going through a transitional process.

These hands were led to create a new video earlier this week. It was only going to be shown to a few people who had shown support of this message. They have not been able to see it yet though—it had been hidden from them (one way or another) without my intent. The situation reminded this man how much this message has been shunned. There are many external things trying to stop it from going forward—yet it will continue.

Know in this heart the Father has been showing something to us at this time. This is the time not only to reveal the message, yet to show the filth that has come from the Jediism and Jedi Realism movements. No one has stood up to faithfully confront this. It is now time for someone to do it.

Going to recreate the channel, start from scratch. It is hard to consider the cost. Yet it is the narrow way this person must go.

Whirlwind

Went ahead and uploaded the video on a new YouTube site (which you can now access on the main Jedihood site), as well as created a Facebook page to post the video there. The decision to create a Facebook page was hard for me as it is a social conditioning tool—although was lead to do it anyways.

Received a real challenge today and passed by staying with the script, as was told. Didn't know why the Father told me to invite this person to speak, yet eventually understood why it was done.

One thing you learn when you become a knight for him is that you do exactly as instructed. He knows. That's why we need to trust him and relate with his words.

This challenge also showed me something quite hard to accept. It is that many do not heed to the scriptures even when they are read. We appear to cut out all the judgments, for example, yet keep all the blessings and positive sayings.

A good example of this is with the book of Joshua. Everywhere this person goes, you will hear it spoken, "Be strong and courageous." These are great words. Yet we fail to understand that this was merely a battle cry prior to the children of Israel destroying many groups of fallen cities—this included men, women, and children.

Are we willing to be courageous enough to utterly destroy wickedness in order to inherit the promise land... based on the promises given to our ancestors? If we aren't, how can we call upon the blessing?

This truth has also brought me to words of Ezekiel. There are some writings he gave which have really started to affect this spirit, especially those in Ezekiel 12. You can read this portion by clicking here.

About a year ago or so, this person started to really grasp how the scriptures present some serious judgments. If not, why write a book called Judges?

Once had a dream about being a judge. It is a very serious thing. You must have the highest standards in order to judge truthfully.

Going to share a teaching presented about ten months ago:

The reading of the scriptures has brought about the concept of judgment.

Over time, noticed many people quote Yahshua's "Judge not that you be not judged" and use it as a way to excuse their actions. When reading the script, though, it is noticed he acted upon many judgments.

For example, in the book of John, he says to "Judge not according to appearance, but judge righteous judgment." He also judges the fig tree and causes it to wither, and definitely judges the Pharisees and Sadducees. In fact, he judges cities, such as Capernaum, for being non-repentant of their false ways. We hear him speak about the days of Jonah, Noah, and Lot—three people who participated in the judgment of people.

When we study the context of these verses, we see there is indeed a certain measure for measure when it comes to wickedness, when fairness and rightness are enforced. This is done in order to avoid ignorance of the injustices in this world—to promote healthy judgment, based on a higher standard which is to be applied to ourselves.

In other words, the real enemy here is hypocrisy. The fig tree, for example, was judged because it was a fruit tree that didn't bear fruit when called to do so. Capernaum was judged as the city was shown truth, yet did not accept it, even when it became so obvious. And, yes, the Pharisees and Sadducees were judged—for even though they read the scriptures, they were not following the heart of it.

The downfall of our society could definitely be seen in the following light:

- 1) We live in hypocrisy
- 2) We do not judge the hypocrisy
- 3) The hypocrisy remains in our lives, and therefore
- 4) There is no justice

Our society will continue to live the way it has—until it has been righteously judged.

The key to righteous judgment is having discernment towards what is right. This is not according to our own standards, but according to the greater standard. It is this standard which is to be marked on our heads and hands prior to the last judgment.

Judges are to be the guardians of peace and justice. If they don't judge righteously, there is no peace.

This is what the Jedi were meant to be in Star Wars. When they failed to judge the leaven in their Order, they failed in carrying out the greater order. They became hypocritical—and because of their hypocrisy, one rose up to judge them.

In the script, the Father brought many tyrants to power in order to judge the hypocrites. You see this with Babylon, the Philistines, and even Rome. Once the hypocrisy is removed though, and the price has been paid... the judgments refrain.

In truth, by demonstrating the inability to judge ourselves, we allow our enemies to destroy our very way of life.

In closing, let this be said: Do not let the word Judge offend you. At the same time, do not allow a word (Jedi) to blind you.

Just because someone grows a fig tree doesn't mean it will grow figs—and just because some call themselves a great teacher, like the Pharisees, doesn't mean they promote the teachings in their lives.

Hope you are blessed by this message.

March 6th, 2001

2/18/2018

March 6th, 2001 is the day that started the seed of what eventually became known as the Jediism cult. Remember that day very well—not only because it was the release date of the first census (in which people placed Jedi as their religion) yet because of its “forced” involvement.

That morning was not the fondest. Remember those alongside this witness online were generally thrilled by the attention, yet especially remember those who were disgusted by it.

Here is the article:

<http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/entertainment/1204829.stm>

This BBC article was the beginning catalyst of what started a personal awareness of a dangerous concoction—that of both 21st Century religion and fictional Jedi belief systems. Know the Father was purposely testing my spirit. Also believe he wanted to have this moment seared in my memory, especially after he had warned this person about it back in October the previous year (the dream).

Remember the media really wanted to push this issue to get the Creed members to speak (which we didn't). This led to the closure of the website—for it was never intended to be used as religious or political material.

Most Jediists are not aware of this March 6th date—as none of them were grouped together when it happened. It wasn't until a month later when a few individuals from the UK (after their E-mail Hoax) got an idea to call this religion Jediism. By August that year (when it had hit Australia), another wave came... and by October, it had hit the UK. That is when it started to go viral.

Keep in mind this was occurring before and after the 9/11 attacks, which is most likely why the States didn't give attention to it until 2002.

Due to a friendly relationship with two New Zealanders, know that New Zealand is used as a testing ground before certain things hit the UK, Europe, and the States—hence it came in that order.

Am reminded about a personal family involvement with the Robert Wendland case—a case that went to the California Supreme Court (the bias-written Wikipedia story will also be shared below):

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Conservatorship_of_Wendland

This situation taught my family to never to trust the media. Given both incidents, this person has now seen them (in multiple occasions) bend people's words to stir about social change.

The Wendland case, which occurred during the time of this incident, only prepared my silence, a silence which shunned away the media regarding the Jedi census.

This incident was a hint from the Father, in order to lead his servant down a particular destined path. Little did this person realize that, by seeing the Jediism seed at the very beginning of its inception, it would grant a natural opening to a particular audience.

Now here we are.

The Degradation of Star Wars and Society

2/18/2018

Star Wars, at its beginning, was wholesome family entertainment when it was released in 1977. It was a time in which many people started to get back to the scriptures, cleaning their households and healing their families. This act brought about a time of spiritual prosperity in our culture which lasted until the mid-1990s.

The original Star Wars drafts were written at the same time the Jesus Movement really started to gain public momentum. The Jesus of Nazareth Miniseries, for instance, was recorded at the same time and location the Star Wars desert scenes were made. This gives us a snapshot of the historical context.

Here is a link to the miniseries:

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=yumogNlaPCE>

Many people who lived during the late 1970's to early 1980's will tell you it was a strong period of time for the family structure.

George Lucas had worthy intentions, borrowing mythical motifs he had learned from Joseph Campbell and others—motifs which eventually led to the concept of the Jedi and the Force. You will also see similar motifs in movies such as the Mad Max series, portraying what is called as The Hero's Journey (which was coined by Campbell's works).

It wasn't until the mid-1990s that the family structure once again started to be attacked, just as it had in the 1960s. With this, though, also came the World Wide Web.

Lucas began drafting a new script for the Prequels, setting up a backstory prior to the original Star Wars. This was also followed by a final VHS release of the original movies—which was, in essence, an end of itself. This is when the message of the originals began to dwindle.

By 1997, when the Special Editions were released, people started to notice a spirit of revisionism. People started to reject this. Although 1999's The Phantom Menace had stirred people (such as myself) to explore the Star Wars mythos, it eventually was seen as a step back. In its place, The Matrix took over, whose spirit was also seen in movies such as Dark City, Pi, and Equilibrium.

It was during a theater viewing of Attack of the Clones that you could tell something wasn't right—Star Wars began to target against its own audience.

Although this person has never smoked, the Death Stick scene for me was extremely hypocritical, especially given that a father figure (the Obi-Wan character) was also drinking an alcoholic-type beverage in a bar in front of young children.

This plateaued to the "If you are not with me, then you are my enemy" quote in Revenge of the Sith, which parodied "Either you're with us, or you're with the terrorists" statement at that time. This also brought remembrance to a particular scripture, in which Yahshua (Jesus) said "He who is not with me is against me," given in the books of Matthew and Luke.

This statement was also followed by "only a Sith deals in absolutes" and "you will try," which directly contradicted the message of the originals of good and evil, as well as a famous quote in The Empire Strikes Back: "Do or do not, there is no try."

It was in October 2012 when Star Wars died. Whatever good intentions were left, it began to be manipulated by Disney and Lucasfilm's new president—both who began to place together a new concoction of social conditioning. This included racial revisionism, neo-feminism, and, in essence, progressive modernism. Regardless of how one sees it, this is exactly what has happened.

Yes, Rogue One was decent—yet do foresee this is the last of it.

As far as The Last Jedi, refuse this movie publicly— in which the main characters teach children to essentially kill the past, including their parents (among other things). This Phoenix-type manipulation has gotten out of control.

This degradation of society, though, has also occurred simultaneously with a small group of people being called to leave corrupt religions, meaningless holidays, and dysfunctional church systems—to go back to the scriptures and relearn the days of old.

New truths have been opened because of this—and it is this divide that has challenged this person to finally speak out against the hooks this new Star Wars age has unleashed.

Download the Jedi App

Yes, it is a free download... yet is full of adverts and in-game purchases.

The first levels are easy to overcome—as it exists simply to get you hooked into your inventoried abilities. Though, as it goes on, it manifests into an unending, tortuous journey, forcing you to do battles against similar players.

People keep forking over their time, money, and energy, attempting to stock hold a slot in the worldly rank list.

Is this not what many have engaged in?

In this new Star Wars age, all we need to do is download the app specifically molded for us, and, in no time at all, we will be unleashing Force powers and overpowering Sith Lords.

Don't worry about who you have to step over to get what you want. Just believe in yourself... for there is nothing to correct or work on, for you are perfect already in every way. You can be anything you want to be.

This is portioned along with the utopian dream we have been fed—a dream which has created a society of irresponsible, selfish, spiritually malnourished people.

It reminds me of what John said of this time in Revelation. Many say they are rich, having acquired the wealth of incredible knowledge—not needing anything other than what is carnally lusted after. Yet, at the same time, many do not realize how blind and naked they are.

What is the counsel? Buy from the Father pure gold refined in the fires of trial. Wear the white garments of purity to cover one's nakedness. Take hold of his spirit to wash away one's blindness.

Love is not a mere carnal reaction. He rebukes and chastises those he loves.

The word “Jedi” means to know (this will be further explained later). It is about a personal relationship with the source of all life—to live by a standard, a compass, which takes us where he wants us to go.

For it’s not about us. It’s not about what we want to inherit, or how we want to live our life. It’s not about believing in ourselves, or attaining a summit of personal realization... or learning fancy tricks or show off mighty powers. This is the path which leads to death.

It is not an app we download or a shaping mold we imprison ourselves under. It is a serious choice, a deep commitment. It requires obedience, integrity, and virtue.

Trials will come, yet it is there to try us in the fire. For man’s work, it is written, shall be made manifest. For in that day the calling shall be declared... it will be a moment revealed by fire.

Allow the Father to put this application within your life. You will be blessed because of it.

Knowing

2/22/2018

Used to believe that to know something meant you need to study it consistently until you master it—that it was all about allocating information, stockpiling an ever-growing mountain of details to hoard for the future.

There are ledges to this type of thinking.

As a society, we are captivated with grabbing on to whatever facts or figures come our way—in order to promote ourselves over the masses, such as winning arguments over our neighbors. This creates unnecessary stress, worry, and strife, especially when we spend so much of it stirring up selfishly-based observations. We then wonder why we have so much conflict in our lives—for it creates inner prisons layered with systematic procedure.

To know, in the scriptures, means to have a personal relationship. To experience someone or something so closely that you can connect with that person or thing. A faithful judge, for example, should relate with the individuals involved in the case when the evidence has been fully laid. One can also picture a fervent investigator—someone who knows the investigation so well it is as if they were present during the moments of question. This is what the word means.

The problem today is many do not relate with anything other than their personal desires. Many see that just because a few of us have taken an oath to be a guardian of peace and justice, this means we are here to openly flaunt learned abilities. Abilities are there to "be able", to respond at those precious moments when one of us must make a stand.

Standing for truth is never convenient. It requires a candid defense.

In the scriptures, the Messiah confirmed we are to love the Father with all our heart, soul, and mind, and that we are to love our neighbor as ourselves. To love someone is to know them well.

Are we willing to speak about things which may not be entirely pleasant? To care so much for a person we are willing to scorn against actions that are unhealthy for them?

Parents must be willing to chastise their children—because they are to love them. Today, many children are left alone without a finger to go against them. This has manifested a society which mirrors this apathy—to the point many aren't willing to lift a finger to do anything for anyone else.

Until we have regained our connection with the Father, we aren't going to know who we are and what we are meant to do. We'll be seeking out vain experiences. We'll be wandering as lost sheep in a desert of sorrow.

Yet he is willing to find us if we are willing to call out to him. For his sheep know his voice.

What is Jedihood?

2/23/2018

This message started out unexpectedly two years ago as a conversation with a long-time friend in need, eventually leading to a thirty hour, fifty part video series. This series provided revelations to a handful of individuals, helping to bring about a strong healing within—especially for my friend who was going through a very difficult time prior to his surgery.

The message went silent again for a half year until an illness came about in January, leading this person to stand up publicly to present the full message for all to see.

Was then challenged a week ago to stand in faith for a given ten months, actively promoting this message and gradually publish up to a three-part video documentary. This is to test its origin, to see if it is from the Father or an imagination. If it does fail, have agreed to openly state my wrong doing and ask for forgiveness from the Father. [Let it be noted that this challenge, although not as personally expected, was fulfilled and confirmed his ways—although taught to never to place such blind faith within worldly motivations].

Jedihood is a message which looks upon the fictional Jedi in Star Wars, yet through the mature lens of biblical scripture. It is a bible study that will offend some—many people desire to have film entertainment distinctly separated from scriptural and spiritual analysis. The scriptures, on the other hand, have been the standard for millennia and for good reason. Believe it to be an injustice that no one has truly given this particular subject the attention it deserves—especially when one finds many hidden scriptural references (as well as various red flags) within the Star Wars films themselves.

When giving out this message, this person will give reference to the Father in heaven. Besides having the message coming directly from the Father, there is another important reason for this—one which will surprise some of you.

The father figure (or lack thereof) is a primary theme in Star Wars. After communicating with various individuals over the years, found a natural trend in which many who closely related with the movies were found to either 1) have a serious conflict with their father figure or 2) no prominent father figure. The Jedi in Star Wars are consistently looked upon as fatherly figures and have captivated many children in this regard.

This is why it is so important to reveal their true character, given that it has touched so many people in families with limited paternal care. With that said, there are many other reasons for this revealing.

You will also see this person speak regarding the source which comes from the Father—not the Force which comes from an energy field. This is to make a clear distinction that will gradually be explained in future words.

Many people assume that in order to practice the persona as depicted by the Jedi, one uses a force similar to the Force depicted in Star Wars. This message will show how the Jedi meaning is rooted in truth yet has been distorted over time—and that the individual use of an impersonal, manipulative energy force is a path that was clearly warned about in scripture as early as Genesis.

Jedihood is a message that his servant did not want to give out originally, as it was discovered during intercession as a social hermit. Yet, at this hour, have been called out of silence to give the message to you directly. It is not simply a matter of choice, yet also a matter of will.

Given this, it is very hard to be up front about such subjects—in comparison with my past years online.

If you know someone who could benefit from this, please let them know—it will strengthen my faith to keep speaking on this.

Really appreciate the family supporting these hands in this endeavour, especially my younger sister—for their support in the latest video introduction as well as the overall study of scripture.

Wisdom

This spirit been led to give a gift from the scriptures for you today.

Many of us look at Solomon as a very wise man, one of the wisest in the world. Wisdom he did indeed have, yet many of us mistake this trait for one who is smart, intelligent, and principled—one who contains a body of knowledge and, in so having, is able to perceive things beyond their normal meaning.

The wisdom that made him great is not the way we have been led to believe.

When he was young, the Father appeared to him in a dream and said “Ask and I will give you.” He replies that David, his earthly father, walked before the Father’s ways in truth and righteousness (this response is a reference to the Torah, or the instructions given in the first five books of Moses). Solomon then says, “I know not to go out or come in.” He realizes he does not know the direction as David did. In so grasping this, he asks, “Give your servant an understanding heart to judge your people—that I may be able to discern between good and evil. “

Solomon, at his birth, was given a spiritual name by Nathan the prophet. This name is Jedidiah. Jedidiah (or Yedidyah, Yedi-YAH) means beloved of YAH. This particular name, on the other hand, has a deeper meaning—as the love which is spoken here is that of a true knowing, a covenant relationship between two people.

This is where we get to the word Jedi. Many people think the word came from a Japanese play, an ancient Egyptian magician, or another similar source—yet its origin stems from a much different source as hinted above. These ancient cultures were aware of this word because all languages came from a mother tongue. This person has been led to understand this language as being the original proto-Hebrew, which existed prior to the Tower of Babel incident.

You will see the Yedi/Yedah word reference throughout scripture as a covenant term, similar to a marriage contract or a blood oath (ketubah). It is a knowing so sacred that it is as if two distinct things become as one wholesome thing. Think of this through the story of Adam and Eve, in which two people are joined together as one flesh.

One of the first references in scripture to this word comes in Genesis 3. There are actually three distinct references in this chapter, which helps define the word, the number, and the third letter of the Hebrew alphabet.

The first one is in Genesis 3:5, in which the Serpent says, “For the Creator knows that when you eat from [the forbidden tree] your eyes shall be opened, and you will be as Him, knowing good and evil.” Notice a distinction with this statement compared to Solomon’s request to the Father, in which he asks to discern between good and evil. In other words, there is a calling of separation of two distinctions, not conglomeration. We will go further into this understanding at a later time.

The second reference is in Genesis 3:7: “Then the eyes of both of them (Adam and Eve) were opened, and they knew they were naked; so they sewed fig leaves together and made coverings for themselves.” There are many truths we can discuss here, such as their covering and the Laodicean reference, yet we will move on for the sake of this message (these items will be looked upon later on, as well as what has been mentioned with Genesis 3:5).

The third reference is found in Genesis 3:22. “Then Yah the Creator said, Behold, the man (a reference to both Adam and Eve, as both came from one flesh) is become as one of us (the aspects of the Creator), to know good and evil.” Given their disobedience and immaturity, not wanting them to eat from the Tree of Life, the Father takes them out of the garden and places Cherubims with the flaming sword to guard it (we will speak about this sword at a later time).

There are many things that can be said here yet we will move on.

The word Jedi also has another relative meaning, which is to appoint. In fact, the Yedi reference was a name given to a specific Israelite as those mentioned in the book of Judges. This is another reason why Nathan was called to give Solomon this name.

Let's go back now to Solomon's dream. Notice he did not ask for wisdom in the traditional sense as we have been taught, yet the ability to understand justice, to know between good and evil. In other words, to separate, as was mentioned earlier.

This ability is clearly demonstrated immediately after this dream, in which Solomon judges a court case between two women, each who claim to be the mother of a child. He challenges both women by declaring that the baby is to be separated in two, so that each woman can receive half. One woman says nothing while the other woman cries for the baby to be spared, allowing the baby to be presented to the other woman. Because of this cry, the revealing of the true mother is given.

In Revelation, it also speaks of two similar women—a fascinating reference to this particular judgment. One is of the pure woman in white who escapes the beast, while the other is the harlot woman who rides the beast. The harlot does this while drinking the cup of judgment. Both claim to give birth to the Messiah... yet as divine judgment is given, the pure woman is shown to be the true mother, which reveals the lie of the harlot.

You can also see this in Proverbs, which speak of two similar women; the purity of wisdom and the foolishness of the prostitute. It is no coincidence that Solomon was known to be the author of this book.

Again, let us go back to the dream. The answer which Solomon gives in his dream pleases the Father. The Father then says, "because you have asked for this, and have not asked for long life, riches, or conquering your enemies, but the discerning of judgment; behold, I have done according to your words, a wise and understanding heart, as well as that which you have not asked, riches and honor."

Let us note the statement the Father makes soon afterwards concerning his life: “And if you walk in my ways, to keep my statutes and my commandments (a reference to the Torah, the instructions), as your father David walked, then I will lengthen your days.” The Father makes it clear that his guidance will bring life, and that to not follow him brings death—which eventually did come about to his nation.

The wisdom which Solomon asked was to perform righteous judgment. Read 1st Kings 3 in full and it will clearly show this truth within the two stories—one in which he is given wisdom, the other in which he performs this wisdom.

This is the same performance that the called out ones must also ask—to not only allow the Father to separate the good from the evil within us, yet to allow him to perform this righteous judgment in front of witnesses. This is what the true seeker of knowledge should strive towards.

Now, given the message that was presented earlier, some will say we are not to judge—yet this was not the teaching of Yahshua (Jesus). He said we are not to judge when we are not following the standard we are to be judged by. First remove the plank before you remove the speck. The real enemy here is hypocrisy (will share more regarding this in the future).

It baffles me when this person sees active Christians and Jews speaking to people that we should be non-judgmental, while at the same time we have a book in the scriptures called Judges. We also have in the book of Revelation the Messiah who will come down with great judgment on this world. This is because many err, not knowing the scriptures, just as Yahshua spoke about in words of Matthew and Mark. Many have twisted the word. This twisting is referred to as wickedness, or the twisting of the wick.

Let’s give an example. Some who say they believe in the Bible have also said it is impossible to live without sin, in order that they may keep performing in their sinful actions. For this, a question is asked: If you are sincerely forgiven of all your sins, are you still living in sin? It is lies like this that we have inherited.

This teaching is to make clear what it means to be a guardian of peace and justice, which Jedidiah was until he began to fall from the instructions of the Father. It also clearly references the true meaning of the Yedi/Yedah (Jedi/Yoda) reference, as presented in scripture.

Some people might say this is just an opinion. For them it is said this: to read the script diligently and see it for yourself. Although many will not want to see it, it is there. We do not have to go to a church to see this. What we must do is go to our Father. He will speak to us in dreams and visions.

Blessed be those that hear the words of this message.

Object Worship

It is amazing how many of us worship objects. The scriptures already confirm that, in our distant past, we worshiped graven images of various gods. Yet we are still doing it today in many forms.

Some may believe we do not mount statues anymore, yet today we glorify toy figures on shelves. We still poster our socially accepted deities upon our walls, as well as follow along with super beings reigning over Earthly domains. Many still attend ritual-cons. Not only do people worship the groves by cutting the trees each winter, many allow their children to pass through the fire for personal wealth. There are still those who bake cakes and drink wine to worship their nightly idols.

Objects are there to teach us a lesson. Human beings though have a hard time separating the object from the message—this is due to the disobedience and immaturity displayed in the Garden of Eden. That is also why the Father made it clear in his instructions not to worship graven images; he knew we were too immature to understand the spiritual backing behind it.

This activity has brought a curse that has fallen upon us, he says, “until the third and fourth generation of those who despise him.” Yet if we follow him faithfully, we will be shown his love for “a thousand generations.”

Some of you reading this will remember a Star Wars quote. “For over a thousand generations,” says Ben Kenobi, “the Jedi Knights were the guardians of peace and justice.”

We eventually see the Jedi began to worship their abilities and orders. Anakin, for instance, worships Padme as an object—so closely that it leads him to the creation of Darth Vader. We also see, as the story unfolds, this curse lasts until the third to fourth generation. Not only is the Skywalker family cursed, yet also a galaxy of planets.

Let's us unveil some meaning to the names of Ben Kenobi, Anakin, Padme, and Darth Vader. Ben Kenobi means Son of the Knowing Soul. Ken has always been a reference to vision and discernment, while Obi is a reference to the heart and soul of an individual. Ben in Hebrew means "son of." Anakin is a reference to the giants/tyrants in scripture, such as the Anakim in the land of Canaan. Padme is a reference to Padma, which means lotus flower—it is an object which many people observe when following the religions of the East. Darth Vader, as most of us know, means Dark Father.

Put this all together and it will tell a story of our spirituality today. In summary, let this be said—this is the time to put down the lotus flower.

In the Odyssey, within the land of the Lotus Eaters, they ate an intoxicating drug fruit called the lotus. The plant caused the sailors to forget about their journey, their homes, and their overall destiny. It caused them to go into a never-ending sleep.

This sleep gives many a very peaceful sensation today, yet it is false peace.

It is time to awake and take on the true orders of the master. If you have these items, pray about it and ask for them to be put away so you can awake from your slumber. When you do so, you will see the message for what it is.

Spiritual Battlefront

There is a huge void in our society. It concerns something people are afraid to discuss in the open as it is too controversial.

People can handle controversy over petty things, such as who was MVP after an All-Star Game—even political debates can stir some passion. Yet when it comes to the well-being of something sacred such as the soul, people try to dismiss it altogether.

Ah, yes. We are in the 21st Century now. Science has shown we are evolving into an ever higher state—that is why we live better lives now, because we have smarter people to make better informed decisions for us. That's why countries are full of prosperity and wars are dwindling.

The truth is that there is more confusion out there than ever before. For being so knowledgeable, we have a society who is so focused on the daily grind many have to take morning soma just to keep their bearings straight. We have so many regulations upon us that we barely have enough time to do anything else other than to satisfy them. And, yet, we wonder why are we so tired and conflicted.

There is a book this person has been reading (on and off) called the Great Controversy. It gave me hints as far as what the true War of Stars is all about.

Stars, in a spiritual sense, represents a domain govern by an angelic principality. Many people see angels merely as winged creatures, as learned from Greek mythology. Though, when you read the scriptures, you will find out an angel is simply a spiritual messenger. This War of Stars is concerned with two factions: One being the Father and his messengers, while the other is of Lucifer and his messengers.

When you look at the meaning of the word Lucifer, you realize it has to do with bearing and reflecting light—whereas the Father is the source of all light.

This brings up a bunch of topics that we will be going over in later writings.

These stars may be fighting over the galaxy, yet their battlefield takes place upon this world—and even though it is a war that is hardly discussed today, it occurs within many of us. This is especially the case for those who are constantly allowing every wondering spirit to come in unguarded. These battlefronts leave a void within. This is why society is constantly trying to fill it with fickle doctrines—yet they will never quite satisfy.

When this person goes outside, it is hard not to see the minefields, barbed wire, and casualties of war. Perhaps it is time to gain some ground—only then can the healing take place.

Surrender

2/28/2018

About four years ago or so, something important clicked within this flesh. It came unexpectedly when reading the scriptures—when this person wasn't trying to seek anything Jedi related. When it came, it shocked quite a bit.

This is what was revealed:

Sometimes you have to let go of things which matter to you entirely, in order to learn why you held onto them in the first place. Allow time and desires to pass. Forget accomplishments. Let people forget who you were. It takes patience, yes, but mostly it takes a full bending of the knees and a sincere, deep-rooted apology to the Father in heaven.

In earlier years, a part of this person still wanted to come back, yet each time, as the urge was denied, it got a bit easier. Then it left entirely. In fact, this message came at a period of time this person wasn't trying to think about it.

It is for this reason the following is going to be said:

The persona can only be truly lived when we surrender who we are completely. This sounds crazy, and yes, most are going to disagree—yet it is true. You cannot be who you are and act the persona at the same time. This is because the persona is all about serving someone other than yourself.

And that was part of the problem before. This person had done noble things, and helped many people, yet still wasn't fully doing it to serve the source of life. At the beginning, though, it was more so. Yet something got lost along the way.

When one serves other gods, such as a tower or yourself, it can get harder and harder to hear the Father's voice. That is why it is so important not to fall under these temptations.

You see, in order to be knighted, one must kneel. Going to go ahead and type this again. In order to be knighted, one must kneel.

Knight means servant. Those who cannot bend their will cannot take the sword of the spirit upon their shoulders. Such a spirit cannot enter when another spirit is holding its place, for the knight must stem from the roots of obedience.

Many people do not recognize what is being spoken here because it comes from a different spirit than most people possess today. The things spoken here can be very hard to understand and most do not want to dwell upon them. There is a reason for this.

When you see that certain people are meant to live up to a higher standard than their own set standards, it changes your view of the world, and life in general. The Jedi persona represents a higher standard. It is a fictional representation of a called out one who upholds truth, justice, order, and peace. They uphold values which promote responsibility, consequence, and sacrifice.

Only a small group who are willing to let go of their objects are capable of this.

What is the order? Many people talk about the Jedi Order, yet do not know what the order is. The order is a command given by your lord to serve. It isn't questioned—it is simply followed, without hesitation or complaint. To submit to the calling is to allow the true spirit to perform tasks you normally wouldn't do.

Those of you in the military who are familiar with drill instructors should understand this quite well—we all follow a master. The problem is most people follow themselves. You will always know who the master is when you are willing to die for that person. Most people die for themselves daily than to die of themselves.

In the scriptures, Yahshua said that he died daily. That is why he was able to do what he did. Are there a few out there willing to do the same?

Justice

3/1/2018

Someone long ago, named Justin, once asked in a conversation the following question: “Is there justice or is there just us?”

Upon hearing this question, the meaning of justice became very apparent, as well as why there is such a stream of injustice flowing upon us today.

The following realization will surprise some of you:

A just person is someone who is sound and upright, setting down personal biases. It is a person who follows a wholesome set of guidelines and applies it fully and faithfully in any given situation. Today, many perceive for such a person to exist is nearly impossible.

In essence, they are correct. That is because our world today is full of people who are based solely on themselves. Polls and opinions are held more highly than foundational truths. We are taught to shy away from exact statements because it brings about limitations.

Many out there believe all groups are correct according to their own ways. Yet that is part of the problem—it is according to their ways, and those ways are constantly changing.

Justice is not about following your ways, my ways, our ways, or their ways. Many are confused because our society is so busy legitimizing paths without knowing where they lead. When we do this, we become lost out in the open.

In the scriptures, it says to not follow a multitude to do evil, nor to speak in a cause to decline judgment. As of today, or society does not heed this.

Where does justice come from? It comes from a higher source than oneself. It is the compass which leads us where we ought to go, not necessarily where we want to go. It is a wholesome perception that is outside of time and location, seeing people at different paths from a far distance. It also knows precisely where these paths are going to lead.

In Deuteronomy, it says that if you follow that which is altogether just, you will live and inherit the land.

Many of us though go forward, not knowing what will come next. On the other hand, if we were to call upon justice, we would be shared the true direction before we tread it. Yet if we keep on following ourselves, it won't end well.

Let us not be blind while following the blind. As someone once said, they both lead to the ditch.

“Who's the more foolish—the fool, or the fool whose follows him?”

Clothing

Let us briefly go over the meaning of clothing when it comes to spiritual garb.

In the scriptures, it says that the last gathering prior to the revealing (Revelation) will be lukewarm and halfhearted. This gathering is spiritually referred to as Laodicea. Laodicea, during the time of the vision, was a center of economic growth and became financially successful. They were completely self-reliant—or so they thought.

It was their self-accomplishments which blinded them from their true spiritual needs—and although they covered themselves with great apparel, they lacked discernment when it came to the covering of their souls.

Does this not sound like our society today?

This brings us right back to the book Genesis. When the man and woman disobeyed, they were ashamed and felt the urge to cover themselves. Nakedness, in spiritual terms, has to do with shame and humiliation (humility). This is due to a spiritual depravity caused by foolish behavior.

Before the depravity, the script tells us they were clothed with a robe of righteousness. It was after their disobedience the Father made skin garments to conceal their lack of covering.

Whenever you find the called ones wearing robes, it is representation of a personal longing for spiritual righteousness—the qualities of rightness, purity, and innocence are represented through this clothing. It displays an inner desire to return to a time when things were complete and had their place.

Let's now go over the basic parts of coverings. Keep in mind that the items mentioned below can either refer to an abundance of spiritual covering (for those who are well aware of its significance) or a lack of spiritual covering (for those who long for it). We will also go into further detail in the near future, yet for now we will briefly give some descriptions.

Head Coverings:

Hoods are known to cover us from the elements, yet they also have spiritual significance when it comes to guarding the entrance to the soul. The entrance is supposed to be protected at all times from spiritual attack. This doorway is also the area that is to be blessed. Hair coverings represent protection and spiritual ability, whereas beards, for men, signify spiritual awareness or the need for such awareness. Besides the scriptures, you can find examples of this when it comes to Native American and Japanese cultures.

Capes and Mantles:

Capes represent spiritual dominion. Whenever you see anyone wearing a cape for spiritual purposes, this is telling you they represent a domain that is to be manifested in the physical world. In the scriptures, a dominion is also referred to as a kingdom. Yahshua specifically wore a garment shawl as he represented a kingdom which was to be brought from heaven to earth. We will look closer at this garment much more at a later time.

Belts (Girdles):

This spiritually represents support, backing, and assistance. In the scriptures, the priesthood wore girdles, which not only explained to the camp their role of servitude, yet also showed spiritual support within the camp's sustainability. Elijah, for example, was a prophet known to wear a tight girdle around his figure.

As brought up prior earlier, people today wear these objects of clothing (especially those who mimic the Jedi clothing in the Star Wars movies) without understanding their true spiritual significance. Some feel comfortable wearing these items because it represents a covering of a spiritual void. At closer examination, you will find specific types of clothing give clear hints of what types of depravity is occurring within the individual.

There is much, much more than can be said here—although, as already mentioned, more will be given out at a later time.

Forced

3/6/2018

Many believe that in order to live the persona (as is fictionally depicted by the Jedi in Star Wars), you must also believe in a concept of an impersonal force energy (such as the Force).

This is simply not true.

Some will even go so far to say that the Force is similar to the Holy Spirit in the Bible—upon close examination, you will find these two are not the same. When looking deep into the scriptures, you find the word spirit in Hebrew has to do with breath, which is called Ruach. Not just any breath, mind you, but the wind of heaven from the Father himself.

In Star Wars, the Force is said to be created by life itself. It is impersonal energy field which is manipulated by one's own accord. The Father's spirit, on the other hand, is completely the opposite. This spirit is not only personal, it stems from something much greater than the life we see around us. Its power is not manipulated by man—for it awakens the heart of man.

As is written in Isaiah 11, the spirit of Yah (the Father) brings wisdom, understanding, counsel, might, and many other spiritual virtues. These virtues do not come from a corrupted totality of good and evil, as seen in the Tree of Gnosis. The tree these virtues originate serves a far different purpose. They bring about true fruits of love, peace, hope, faith, as well as justice and chastisement—just as a sincere father would bring to the children he loves.

Isaiah also speaks about the Messiah as having a completeness of this spirit—that he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes or reprove after the hearing of his ears. He is to reprove with righteousness, smiting the Earth with the rod of his mouth. Through the breath of his lips he shall slay the wicked.

Fear, as it is spoken about in Star Wars, is the path to the Dark Side of the Force. The fear depicted in the movies is consistently produced by human frailty. Yes, the scriptures teach we should not fear men—yet it also says to fear the one who has created all things. This fear, though, has been greatly misunderstood in scripture. A better word would be reverence, or respect. It is similar to a boss at work or a military general.

Just as children should follow the orders given by a sincere father—we should, in turn, follow the Father's orders. This is because we are to respect him more than the enemy we go against. He protects us from harm. He is stable and consistent in all his ways.

The concept of the Force is something entirely different. It has proven itself to be extremely fickle and bipolar, especially in times of spiritual duress. In fact, it uses its sides to constantly go against itself. This, in itself, is a disorder. We would easily consider this as disorderly in fellow human beings—yet, when it comes to ourselves, we have a hard time seeing it. The inner conflicts and confusion seen today has gradually portrayed this unnatural mindedness.

In the scriptures, James speaks of the double minded man as being “unstable in all of his ways.” According to book of Psalms, those who speak vanity also speak with a double heart.

On the other hand, in the letter to the Colossians, Paul tells the servants to obey their masters—not with eye service as men pleasers, but in singleness of heart. The Messiah, within the writings of Matthew and Luke, mentions that the light of the body is the eye—and that, when the eye is single, the whole body is full of light. He then speaks of the evil eye being against this singularity.

We will delve into this later on.

There is a teaching which really presents this clearly—the teaching of brick and stone. In the scriptures, you will see both items are spoken about very differently, hinting of separate natures.

The brick, for instance, is a mixed stone—produced by man to create buildings for themselves. It is not naturally produced and was usually formed through by vanity and slavery. The stone, on the other hand, is natural, stable, and complete. It represents a foundation in truth.

Throughout history, human monuments have come and gone—yet the rocks and mountains remain. They are a natural element which has stood the test of time.

The Force is not natural—for its totality clings onto the unnatural. It is a forced attempt to reason the wages of death in a once perfect world.

Yet, if we stand with the Father, we will know him. For to know the Father means relationship.

This is what the true persona must uphold.

Origination

3/8/2018

When first watching The Empire Strikes Back, we are surprised when Darth Vader is revealed as Luke Skywalker's father. This revealing allows us to re-explore both characters with more detail, providing better interpretation of previous scenes we thought we already knew.

Life has similar surprises. Doors are opened to reveal greater truths when origins are sought after.

In the book of Genesis, it is no coincidence that a family lineage is provided after it goes over an important portion of the story. These are natural markers which help us pinpoint the story's context, providing further understanding to its meaning. In Deuteronomy, it says to remember the days of old and to consider the years of many generations. The book also says we should ask the fathers to reveal it—as well as the elders to tell it.

Today, many of us open a Bible as if we were casually browsing store adverts tucked in the newspaper. We look closer at items which appeal to the eyes and ears—then purchase scriptural soundbites to utilize for our liking. We call these items memory verses.

The problem with this is we tend to lose the circumstances of the verses. It's like taking a metric out of a rhythmic stanza—then gleaning upon that metric over and over without reciting the actual rhyme.

Our society has lost the understanding of scriptural truth. This is because so many of us fail to participate in the very act of seeking it. Many will not ask the Father to reveal himself, or let their elders explain. This current structure has pushed both away in order for a state or tyrant to deem us worthy.

Worthiness today appears to come in a form of robotic slavery. In fact, the word robot itself (robotnik) refers to drudgery and forced labor. Is it no wonder we live in a generation of automatons?

We must realize that we will keep going this path until certain people are willing to revitalize the spirit instead of the machine—for this is not simply about revitalizing who you currently are, yet what you are to hold.

You see—we are more than just ourselves. We carry the blood of those before us. Given that selfishness and short-sightedness will continue to make decisions based on carnality, we must therefore pay attention to our origin and direction. What about the future of the unborn, or the trails of blood spilt by our ancestors before us? We are not alone in our pursuit.

Purpose is not earned based on mere works of a person—it is found within the directive the person has been given since birth. There is a story to be told within us. That is why we must allow the storyteller to speak instead of our fleshly desires.

The Father will show us. Our ancient elders will tell us. What we need to do is listen and be silent—for how can we find out who we are if we don't know who we have been?

So many of us strive for originality and uniqueness, yet fail to grasp that we all who are living began somewhere. As it says in Ecclesiastes, “there is nothing new under the sun.” So why do keep re-treading? Why start a journey without seeking to understand the markers on the road? Not learning these signs will only lead us back where we started.

This is a time for us to stay on point.

Flaming Sword

3/10/2018

We first read about this in Genesis, in which Yah Elohim places Cherubim with a flaming sword to defend the tree of life. We see it again in Exodus as the flame of fire from a midst of a bush (which speaks to Moses), as well as a pillar of fire which guards the Israelites from the Egyptians when they cross the Red Sea.

This flame represents Yah's authority and is usually accompanied by angels. Let us be reminded that angels, in scripture, are messengers and representatives of Yah—not necessarily the Greek, mythical feathered form we picture in our minds today. These servants do the will of the Father and can take the forms of human beings—such as a prophet, priest, or an ambassador.

Yah's flame is associated with both The Word (known as Davar, or doors to the house of knowing) and The Spirit (known as the holy fire, wind, or Ruach). The apostle John spoke about the Messiah Yahshua (Jesus) as being manifested from The Word (Davar) to bear witness of The Light (Ruach).

During Pentecost, a wind came down and manifested upon Yahshua's apostles as fire, giving them the ability to speak clearly to those of other languages. As a side note, churches today (Circe spirit, to be explained later) foolishly interpret this as a careless chant of scattering words and humming (read Amos 6).

The Ark of the Covenant presents a similar picture to what we see in the Garden of Eden. On the sides of the ark are two Cherubs (Cherubim) which guard the judgment (bema, mercy) seat. Upon the seat appears the flame of Yah's glory.

We see various attributes of this flame within the seven candlesticks in the Holy Place, known as the Menorah. These attributes are given as spiritual mantles to his people and are also represented in colors. More will be shared about this at a later time.

Today, we see this defensive weapon in a popular Science Fiction myth known as Star Wars. This weapon is called the lightsaber.

Many people believe the lightsaber was invented by George Lucas for Star Wars—although it was known for thousands of years in its original guise. As with the flaming sword, the lightsaber also represents an authority which is defended by messengers. These messengers (both the Jedi and Sith) hold various mantles, represented by the various colors of their sabres.

It is recommended you watch the video “The Seven Spirits” within the Jedihood series for more information regarding this weapon.

Star Wars, in spiritual terms, is a war between messengers. It is similar to shepherds fighting over flocks in scripture. For example, read about the spiritual duel between Moses and Pharaoh concerning the Israelites. In Star Wars, these shepherds are fighting over the galaxy. In comparison to the scriptures, a war takes place in heaven in which a third of stars (angels) are banished.

You can read about this war in Isaiah, Hebrews, Revelation, and other scriptural writings.

The Cherubim in scripture are seen in pairs, similar to the Wheel seen by Ezekiel and the Living Chariot of Elijah. As the Cherubim, the Jedi in Star Wars are also encouraged to conduct their lightsaber duels in pairs.

The presence lightsabers in Star Wars represent an earlier stable time of order and justice, in which chosen people, known as Jedi, defended and protected the galaxy from external threats. This is similar to the Judges in scripture (such as Gideon, Samson and others) who rose up to maintain the land from external threats.

The flaming sword is the spiritual word which comes from the Father. The lightsaber in Star Wars, interestingly, also represents a spiritual word—yet we must note that this word comes from another source entirely (the Force). It is important to become aware of this.

Just as with the two trees in Eden (the Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil), there are two trees today. Just about everyone today eats the fruit from the gnosis of both good and evil—dare it become compared the Force of Light and Dark Sides. This tree eventually leads to confusion and death. The faithful ones, on the other hand, are supposed to seek the fruit that is pure and living.

The Messiah has shed blood in order for group of chosen people to rekindle a true relationship from the Father. This requires a seeking of his flame—just as it is with a loved one. To do this, we must let go of the corrupted enchantments of sorcerers and magicians—these are simply counterfeits to the truth.

Instead of seeking rebellion, this it is time to seek his obedience. Obedience and submission are synonymous with harmony, peace. In Hebrew, peace is referred to as Shalom. It means to be complete, whole, and safe. We cannot have this peace outside of his walls.

Although wars may come, his flame protects his chosen from harm.

Betrayal

Someone recently asked how betrayal should be dealt with—it is a sincere question which deserves an honest answer. Have experienced this in numerous occasions, so will speak about it.

There are many forms of betrayal, yet there is one common theme which runs throughout— the result of exposing someone who is trustworthy to dangers they didn't reap. In the scriptures, it speaks to this as one uncovering a person's nakedness.

When someone betrays another person, it doesn't necessarily mean they intended to hurt that person. Most of the time, it is unintentional. Sometimes the act isn't realized until many years later. Sometimes it is never realized.

Let us take an infamous example in the Bible, Judas Iscariot. When you look closely, you will note that he did not intend his actions towards the Messiah to bring about the stake of suffering—it was this realization later on which leads him to his own hanging. What he did intend was to rationalize his actions. This was due to a weakness in a particular vice (money), as well as his personal opinion as to how the Messiah should be lifted up.

We also see the betrayal of Peter who denied the Messiah three times. As Judas, he was sincerely grieved—yet his humility and brokenness (which he had been hinted prior) allowed the Father to atone and forgive his fallen spirit.

These are unintentional betrayals. What about intentional?

A purposeful betrayal is what this person refers to as the unkind cut ("the unkindest cut as referenced in Shakespeare's Julius Caesar). This is the hardest type of betrayal to deal with due its brutal (Brutus) nature. It can be very painful, especially if it comes from a person who has befriended you for some time.

As for the gospel story of the Messiah, Caiaphas, the High Priest of the Sanhedrin at that time, declared that it would be best “for one man to die instead of a whole nation.” Although a few were sincere, there were certain priests who intentionally did what they could to destroy the Messiah’s message—in order for them to maintain their current power and influence.

With this said, how should we deal with these types of betrayal? Yes, we are meant to learn from the experience as it reveals truth about other people—yet we must ask for the true spirit to be revealed to those who betray, especially those who unintentionally do so. This is so they can come to the understanding of what they have done and will stop accordingly.

This requires a sincere forgiveness for such people. Given this, do not bury your frustrations and allow it to simmer in your actions—make it known to the Father and allow him to release this pain. He will know what to do.

Although the world is very unforgiving, the Father is willing to redeem those who honestly seek him with their whole being.

Remember though that kindness must be sincere, not forced—it must be given in love. This is why it is important to know the Father will not forsake you, for he is not of this world. “We are not wrestling against flesh and blood,” says Paul to the Ephesians, “but against principalities and powers, spiritual wickedness in high places.” Let us not be ignorant of this as our betrayers have.

So many do not know what they do because they do not know him. To know the Father means relationship—that is the whole point of this teaching.

Let us know him in a relational sense—not a gnostic one. This is Yedah.

Aggressors of Commotion and Tolerance

Was led to stop complimenting certain individuals with the “J” word—many simply do not follow what the word stands for, let alone follow the very codes they themselves advocate.

Yes, there is a very small handful that do—yet even they are primarily focused on inventing doctrines instead of partaking in sound virtue. It is this focus that has determined their distorted reality.

In the dictionary, there is another expression for code—that being a statement of law, or statutes. In the scriptures, they have the same exact terms—laws, statutes, precepts, testimonies, judgments, and ways (read Psalms 119 and you will be immersed in them). These terms are generally referred by many as commandments.

When it comes to scripture, many assume there are simply the Ten Commandments. These commands are a summation—similar to what Yahshua gave concerning the two great commandments. The Torah, including the word of the Father given by the prophets, is filled with codes given by the Father.

Over time, just as with laws expressed in scripture, people have twisted codes to refer to something it originally did not mean. This includes the Jedi codes.

The first, original definition given to the Jedi in Star Wars is pretty straight forward—they are the guardians of peace and justice. Not just for any system, mind you, yet for the Old Republic.

The word “Old” refers to the ancient way of living. “Republic” refers to a non-tyrannical, constitutional government—this is directly related to the declaration that people are naturally endowed with rights which aren’t originated by man.

Those who say they are a Jedi do not partake in peace anymore. Perhaps some did at one point or another, yet in its place today are opinions which lead to confusion and distraction. Their communities are demoralized, easily agitated, and see with a blurred vision. They are easily upset when things go wrong, cluttering themselves with various practices and puzzles as if they were medications inside a bathroom cabinet.

They are easily distracted with amusements. They partake in gossip and vain babble. They give temper tantrums when they don't get their way. This is what is seen in their communities.

Tolerance is a buzz word they use today—it is now being used in a way to prolong spiritual rape and abuse. Rape, by definition, is the violation, molestation, and plundering of another person. It is similar to using someone and later betraying them (as was explained earlier in this message). Abuse is the perversion and misuse of others, which, in essence, leads to prostitution. These are activities which are currently being tolerated.

Some may say they are not performing this tolerance—yet by the very act of doing nothing to stop it reflects this guilt. They are, in essence, tolerating people to act in this manner.

To tolerate these activities is to allow the endurance of another's pain or hardship. This word, although used in terms of empathy for others, is given in order to indulge in vices—turning eyes away from the obvious obstruction.

The perfect example in scripture would be the parable of the Samaritan. We find that both the Pharisee and Levite, known to be spiritual examples of the higher standard, are quick to turn their eyes away from the lowly classed Samaritan. Even when the obvious right is in front of their noses, they hold their idolized stature over the will to do what is right. This is the very form of ignorance.

Justice, on the other hand, is a constant which faithfully executes—whether it's accommodating or scolding. Sincere justice will always show empathy towards the innocent—not because it wants to, yet because it ought to.

So who are the guardians of peace and justice supposed to be?

They are to be Knights. A knight comes from the word servant—to serve means to help and assist. They are custodians, dependent upon the master who gives them orders. They are to faithfully follow the master's order without complaint or thought of reward. They don't drudge in vain (vanity), yet are sincerely penitent and humble—they willingly and faithfully attend on the well-being of others. These chosen ones are of an extremely rare quality.

Given this description, we then we wonder why Disney is changing this model in their new Star Wars movies—for who in our society could live by such high standards?

No, this person does not see Jedi Knights of Guardians of Peace and Justice anymore—what are seen are protectors of ideologies and religious custom, those who follow tradition over truth. Those who say there is no death, yet practices and openly flaunts its ways.

It doesn't have to take a thousand generations—it can take just two, or three. We are already living in the dark times.

Discipline

It is good to let the Master give hard things to us—especially right now. We need to hear his words. These hard things are given because there are still a few of us left open for chastisement. We who are left should not flee from its scolding.

Those of us left cannot be afraid to admit we have allowed darkness to enter, however minimal. We have been lazy at guarding our eyes, opening portals that should have never been opened. We have been deceived by vain things. We have done stupid things.

Let us admit this and be open to the reprimanding.

Most people see punishment as mere retribution, not understanding it is synonymous with training, maturity, and correction. Proper punishment teaches us a lesson, lecturing us on our immaturity and the need for development. How else can one change from their unstable certainty?

Without these high standards, we have nothing really to stand for. That is why it is important to know the law—that is, scriptural law.

Just as if one was to defy the law of gravity or thermodynamics—defying the spirit has similar consequences.

When we deny our Father, we are deny our original, true nature—for it is the Father who gives us commands in order to teach us about the greater living. When we come to maturity, they are to be ingrained—there is no point for a police state or a security camera to watch you. You simply act and obey.

This is the spirit of the law the Messiah spoke about—they are not to be tossed away, yet brought to their fullness. Allow the Father to bring this fullness within you.

Jediism is Phariseeism

This message will expose certain truths which will affect both Jediism believers and those who follow Christianity. You have been warned.

Although these words will be a hard pill to swallow, this message is not here to feed malnourished scraps—in order to get you to act as lap dogs begging for more (which is what religion and cults like to do). This is real meat for those who honestly and sincerely desire to know and follow the true source of life.

The truth is the entire Jediism movement is based on disgruntled people who once followed the Christian doctrine, most notably Catholicism. You can take this statement to the bank. In fact, let these words challenge you to interview the most avid believers of Jediism so you can see this is actually the case. Many have rebelled against this broken religion to form their own religion.

The reason why these once Christian believers went to Jediism is because they were tired of the hypocrisy of the church system (which is, indeed, hypocritical). In a sense, you can point this very system as one of the catalysts for producing such fruit.

These Jediist believers are eventually finding out that they have brought the same sort of hypocrisy over to their new religion—they still practice the church rituals, give out the same feel-good sermons, and attempt to conform to other beliefs in order to grow their base.

Why is this happening? It is because they are bringing what they have been raised with—the desire to build a tall tower for themselves. In fact, this is no different than the empire George Lucas eventually built—this, though, is being done with a religious front instead of an entertainment front.

What we see are those who are raised in Church Christianity (Churchianity) and Catholicism, earnestly seeking spiritual nourishment yet cannot find it. Instead of blaming the works of those who falsely teach the scriptures, they rebel against the Father in heaven for these troubles—pointing to the scriptures as being full of error. [There are those now who have been pricked and are seeking to find ways back to the faith due to the bringing of this message (this was intentional)].

They do not turn to the Father for guidance—they turn to their own misconceptions. Because of this, they have turn to the nearly extinct beliefs of the East. Many find it very comforting to know there is no Father to provide sternness to them—yet in return, they find a loneliness and lack of relationship in their vain abstractions.

Due to this lack of relationship, individuals began to create a new religion altogether—even if it was built out a joke or hoax as Jediism was.

Jediism is a religion which has amalgamated all beliefs—taking the fun, rewarding parts and throwing away the responsible and judgmental ones. All of this came out of the mold of census taking back in the early 2000s—a baked cake which promises moral benefits without the responsibilities of self-sacrifice.

This cake has tasted quite sweet for many years now, yet people are gradually becoming aware of the effects brought by artificial additives. They have gotten fat and idle—stuck in sleep within the land of the lotus flower. Although many believed they were free, they are slowly finding themselves in the prison of man's doctrine.

Will we ever learn from making these stupid mistakes? How many societies must rise and fall until we know that a reinforcement of legions (doctrinal religion) is a path for the faithless?

This matter also brings us to the scriptures. The very revealing of scripture creates a conflict within as many do not want to be revealed for their heinous actions. Many want to hide in religion and ritual—look godly as with the Pharisees and Sadducees, displaying large tassels, belching out loud prayers to show everyone how holy they are.

Jediism is modern day Phariseeism. It is no different than a teacher of Talmudic or Kabbalistic dogma to override scriptural truth. In the end times, the scripture says that all will be revealed. You have been given this revealing.

There is a hidden anger within Jediists regarding the scriptures. Test it and you will see it is true. In fact, many will say that the scriptures have nothing to do with the Jedi—they will go out of their way covering this by quoting psychologists and philosophers. Nothing can be so further from the truth—for the very persona itself is spoken in scripture.

What has changed regarding the persona is a belief—a belief that stems from a term called the Force. The Force has been used to promote a hodgepodge of various spiritual energies, placed together in order to form an impersonal energy. It is these energies which essentially uses the various sides to destroy each other.

Isn't this not what Emperor Palpatine uses to create his Empire? Isn't this what the scriptures say Satan will do so that he can be like the Most High? Feel free to read the writings of the prophet Isaiah.

It is this current "Force" that has defined their groups. This Force has nothing to do with the Jedi at all—and that is a large part of the problem. Until they acknowledge this truth, they will continue in their hypocrisy.

Jediists have allowed an empire corporation, along with their visual displays and fictional writings, to literally dictate who they are. Although some deny this, the proof is in the pudding—whenever a movie comes out, they are quick to defend it (The Last Jedi). Eventually, you will see this inclination bring about their destruction.

This has become one big mess—a mess so great that the only thing to do is to cut it down the corrupt tree and burn it with fire. Never the less, for the sake of the wheat amongst the tares, time has been given for revelation.

Although people will point to Jediists and say they are fanatics—we also need to point out the corruption of the religion and the church system these people are under and note their fanaticism. As for the Atheists out there—their religious science has also brought its own fanaticism. It all needs to be exposed.

The words of the Father will be exposing this. It will separate the holy from the profane—for it is the light sword of truth (the real lightsaber).

Going to share a YouTube video from Malcolm Smith, called The Pharisees. Jediists are basically this today. We must be aware of the leaven of the Pharisees.

Mount Carmel

3/26/2018

My spirt has sensed a showdown coming.

In the book of Kings, there is a story in which Elijah challenges the 450 prophets of Baal and 400 prophets of the groves—to meet with him on Mount Carmel in order to show to the people of Israel who the Elohim truly is.

This particular passage in scripture can be a bit hard to follow as the word “lord” is interpreted in three different instances—although, in the original Hebrew, they are all different words. The first mention of the word is given to the name of Yah, which is LORD—translators gave this to hide the ancient name. The second mention is when Obadiah is speaking to Elijah, in which “lord” is referenced as a polite greeting to one that has authority. The third mention is actually with the name Baal itself—a false worship which, in Hebrew, can be interpreted as “Lord,” yet also “Husband,” “Master,” “or “Possessor.”

Some out there are aware of an early site called the Jedi Academy back in the mid-1990s. This site was heavily influenced by an individual named Baal Legato. Given that Baal can be interpreted as Master, the name also means Master Legato. Back then, it wasn’t uncommon for online users to use the word Master within their name. Usually the word was given in reference of title that was supposedly earned—similar to Rabbi as in Yahshua’s time.

When reading the scriptures, the Baal title really starts to hit home. What was it that made Baal worship so dangerous to the people of Israel—and how did it separate itself from the true Father (I AM)? The answer is in its practice.

On Mount Carmel, Elijah challenges these four hundred and fifty masters (if you will) and says to the people, “How long will you be between two opinions?”

The word opinion in Hebrew means divided. As many of you know, the belief in the Force is literally of two opinions—it is divided into a Light side and a Dark side, and, in being so, are part of the same energy or spirit. Some may also remember a mantra which goes: “Two sides, one Force.” This is a marking of who their god is.

This is also a reminder why we must never lust after the opinions of men. By putting faith in opinions, we are putting our faith in division and chaos. As Yahshua once rightfully stated, “A house divided against its own self cannot stand.”

Let us return to the story at hand. Many people believe that Baal worship reflected on only one god—the worship was actually towards many gods. “Call on the name of your gods,” says Elijah, “and I will call on the name of Yah.”

The belief in the Force has grown to a belief of many gods found in various religions, especially those from the East as well as new age Gnosticism. In fact, Force believers take pieces from all religions.

In the scriptures, there is a particular word that is used to describe this act. That word is amalgamation. It could be safe to say that by taking from these religions, Jediists have taken the spirits of these gods in order to combine them into a powerful spirit.

Is it this spirit which gives the Jediists today their power? The answer is obvious.

“The one that answers by fire—let him be Elohim.”

Fire in the scriptures is directly related to the Spirit of Yah, or, in another sense, the Word of Yah. In the book of Deuteronomy, it says that Yah is a consuming, holy fire. With that said, there is also what is known as strange fire, or strange gods—these are other forms of worship which infiltrate the true worship.

As was spoken before, fire is directly related to the Word, which is directly related to the Spirit. As it says in the books of Psalms and Proverbs, the tongue is as a sword. A fire sword, such as seen with the lightsaber, is essentially a powerful word which comes from the holy tongue.

Mount Carmel is about presenting an answer—it's an answer of fire. Which fire will burn up the sacrifice? Which tongue will ignite in the showdown?

Are hearts to be turned back again? We will see.

Vengeance is Mine

4/8/2018

My family has been going through the days of Unleavened Bread. The practice of removing leaven has been strongly impressed upon our spirit the last couple of weeks. Our senses have been highly sensitive because of it—the very hint of unknown evil is being exposed in our own hearts.

During the removal process, there has been a spiritual attack which has attempted to drain this person from continuing to speak out publically. The Father has allowed this attack in order to test this heart to see where it belongs.

It has exposed the enemy on two accounts. It is about to expose a third enemy.

Some Star Wars fans will remember a book called Jedi Apprentice: The Call to Vengeance. In this book, Qui-Gon is faced with a dilemma in which he has a great urge to avenge a wrongdoing.

The reason for bringing this up is not because of the book itself, yet to see a bigger picture. This picture presents the line between a hurting frustration and a righteous judgment.

Yahshua explains this line in John 7, in which he says, “Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment.” As some of you know, appearances can be very deceiving—the adversary can use a worthy cause to expel an unexpected blow. Righteous judgement, on the other hand, cannot lean one way or another—however slight. The blade swipe must be precise or it can cause serious damage—not only the opposing spirit, yet also its wielder.

After meeting two strikes, the adversary presented a platform which was thought to be solid and firm. When standing on it, it exposed not only a weak foundation but also an unbinding confidence. Although the words were true, it was my attitude in the last movement which lost its foundation—for it was given in frustration. The Father approved the words yet not my tactic. Because of this error, was punished greatly for it. It took night and morning prayer to find resolution.

You will find that the chosen ones are held towards much higher standards than those of the general public. This is because they are to be reflecting examples of the Father's will to the world.

In Deuteronomy 32, the Father says, "To me belongs vengeance and recompense—their foot shall slide in due time. The day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon them make haste." This is again confirmed with Shaul's (Paul) letter to the Romans. "Therefore," Shaul says, "if your enemy hungers, feed him. If he is thirsty, give him drink. Doing so will bring the heap coals of fire upon his head."

When we give vengeance of ourselves in the very slightest (even if unknowingly), we are disallowing the Father to judge. This battle is not with flesh and blood—it is with the spiritual forces of evil. Therefore, we cannot overcome the spiritual enemies of darkness with self-oriented passions—we must overcome with good, sound judgment.

With that said, this person will continue to expose Jediism as well as the fall of Jedi Realism—yet will also remember the lesson which humbled this person.

The people are under spiritual attack. We must allow the Father to bring justice to these spirits, while at the same time, feed the needy and poor who earnestly don't know what they do. For the ignorant, there is the way towards forgiveness. To the haughty—there is a heavier punishment.

Someone commented after the prayer (came online by fate) and asked me to take one or two steps back. This person will do exactly that—will turn off the sabre for a brief moment to allow the Father's spirit to come forward.

May the Father be with you Always, even until the End of Time.

Prologue

This message came to life on March 29th, 2016:

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=WIZS-iJ7m1E>

Will go ahead and share a bit of the back story which brought this message about.

In early 2016, two spiritual brothers come together again after ten years of silence. Two years earlier they had attempted to resurrect their past website known as The Jedi Creed—yet due to the fallen state of the Jedi Community, the project was put under lock and key.

Now in their thirties, with their organizational days well behind them, they know they are being called back to perform. Streen had found a sense of renewal knowing that his friend has returned—he finds though that Relan Volkum has transformed into another being, known as Yahunatan. This crazy hermit (seen as a madman to some) speaks in a different tongue. He had changed.

Streen had a difficult time adjusting to this. His health was very poor at the time, previously dealing with scoffers eager to disprove his mantle.

A challenge is given to him:

"What we are going to do is warn this community of the direction it is going and give an answer that many will not like," says Yahunatan. "For at least a year, we must do this without building a grand organization for ourselves. It will be called Jedihood. The focus will be humility and moving people out of their comfort zones."

Streen accepted the challenge, although remains frustrated and broken. "I can't do a video."

"You simply have come full circle, while the others are still figuring out where it will lead. Until you get to that broken state—you can't get out of the cocoon and speak the wings."

Yahunatan pauses for a moment, and then speaks again. "Metamorphosis is the only way, rebirth... or born again."

The term "born again" used to be known by Christians as an induction to a deep experience of faith—a moment when the relationship becomes real, when they have developed a direct and personal connection with God. This birth though has nothing to do with Christianity—it never has. It's about entering a kingdom—being born of water and spirit.

"Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit," Yahshua states, "he cannot enter into the kingdom of Yah."

"And this is the condemnation: that light has come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light—because their deeds were evil. For every one that does evil hates the light—neither comes to the light, lest his deeds should be reprov'd."

"But he that follows truth comes to the light—that his deeds may be made manifest." To manifest something is to demonstrate, to display one's acts or appearance. This is how the Jedihood message came about.

Jedihood is a "motion picture" of this example. It is a message which, although hard, presents truth in order to bring about a birth. It is through the Father's words that this world was created—it is the same for the human soul.

The Rest

4/14/2018

Do you hear it?

knocking

If you aren't paying attention, you won't be able to hear it.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ssPtcQXg81k>

You know the main reason why people can't hear the Father speak at this time? It is because we are too busy speaking to ourselves. We talk too much.

The signs of this are everywhere. For example, whenever on Facebook, find many out there caught up in hearing themselves speak—seeking this or that to plague the mind with stress, worry, and strife. Our attention spans are so faint now—no one has the time to truly invest in relationship, in true knowing.

This knowing must begin at the house of the Father. If you don't know the Father you will not know yourself.

Too many of us are striving to seek who we are on our own terms. Many will keep searching for such and will not find it. The entrance has been sealed.

The Father knows who you are—for he gave life to you. Until we bend to his will, his rules, and his domain, we will not find the kingdom of heaven. We will not rest upon his mountain.

The fire sword (as we spoke about previously) is the origin of the ancient lightsaber. This weapon was harnessed by a group of messengers who were commanded to guard the Tree of Life.

In a sense, they are still guarding it.

The Father though has given us the ability again to choose life—according to his ways and truths. He has brought about salvation (that is what Yahshua means in Hebrew). He has given us the path to return home—yet we must be willing to enter his rest. That means letting go of one's own desires in order to serve him.

This is what the Story of the Prodigal Son is all about. Because of our urges—our indulgences to the bodily senses—we have become fat and vain. The dragon has taken advantage of this—so many are enchanted by his sirens. We must let go of these things.

Humble yourself and seek his face again.

Many of you learned who he was when you were a youth—but your soul has been left hardened. Do not let your lives be spent in vain. Even Solomon knew that all of it leads to vanity—he was known to be the wisest of men. The respect of the Father is the beginning of wisdom.

Let us all fall down and hear him.

The Magical World of the Force

What is the true nature of the Force people worship today?

It is amazing how the scriptures have revealed its nature at this time, especially when not attempting to look for its meaning. Let us learn what the Father's words will speak to us today regarding this nature.

All of us have been lured into eating fruit from a tree we should not be eating. Many still eat this fruit in ignorance. They are tantalized by sensory magician tricks—enchanters who wave their hands, seeking to gain great powers from spirits without questioning the very spirits they conjure.

Before “becoming the Force,” as the Church of Jediism states, you better know what spirit you are asking to possess you.

Will go ahead and remind the audience here that this message is not for itching ears. It is not here to make you feel lax and careless—nor is this about self-empowerment or peer coaching. These practices are a dime a dozen.

This, on the other hand, is a challenge. It is a challenge to those of you who sense something is way off base. Something which seemed invisible yet now has gotten increasingly visible.

Have we been deceived by a Dark Lord?

Many years ago, even before helping to establish the Jedi Community, this person learned to challenge spirits. In fact, there was a chat room long ago called “The Challenge of the Force.”

Without challenge, there is no growth.

Today, many seek to and fro for any solution that comes their way, dabbling with this and that—willing to accept everything face value as gospel truth. They are caught up in earning self-attainment by degrees—yet fail to see the chains being shackled upon them. They have become too focused on doctorates and letters which give false validity.

Because of these acts, they have not paid attention to the doctrine they are being initiated into. It is time to expose further truth about this Force which many have created for themselves.

Originally, the Force from the Star Wars movies was composed by both Light and Dark sides. Many at its early inception clearly understood it represented a battle between good versus evil. Eventually, during the Prequels, we were introduced the concept of balance—the need for an even distribution of weight between the two. This is where the Force became even more distorted.

Today, the new Star Wars movies have led to a great mixture of various shadings. It has also led many to a female deity which has nothing to do with the Father in scripture. This deity has separated women from the union which the Father sanctioned—which is why many women today are being rejected from having marriage. We must reject this goddess.

The script consistently warns us not to mix the holy with the profane—yet we have seen this very act over and over throughout the ages. Scripture also warns us of those existing in a dual state of mind (we have spoken about this earlier, yet we will now go into more detail).

In the script, you will find the words “double-hearted,” “double-minded,” and “double-tongued.” In Psalms 12, it states that the fallen “speak vanity every one with his neighbor—with flattering lips and with a double heart do they speak.”

A snake (dragon) in scripture is also known as the enchanter. When you see a snake's tongue, for example, do notice how it comes out as two sides—although at its stem it is converged in one. This is a representation of Dualism—it is, in fact, enchantment. You can find out more about this in Genesis 3 and 6.

Today, with the fusion of other sides to the Force, we see it is now composed in various shades. These shades have ultimately led its followers to the acceptance of ambiguity and uncertainty—bringing about the indoctrination of the Gray path.

In Hebrew, when you speak the word shade, it translates as demon. You will find this word also in Latin and Greek. A group of demons, for instances, are known in those languages as the Shedim.

In Deuteronomy 32, it states that “They provoked him (Yah) to jealousy with strange gods—with abominations they provoked him to anger. They sacrificed unto devils (Shedim)—not to Yah, to gods whom they knew not—yet to new gods that came newly up, whom your fathers feared not.”

Has the Force essentially become a modern-day worship of various gods, conjured up as various shades? Yes, it has. When you see worship with a heavy influence in idolatry (medallions, meditation beads) and Baal (Master) worship, it begs the question to be asked.

This is yet another challenge for those of you to read the scriptures and seek the Father’s words. Wake up from the magic spell before making further deals with devils.

Knighted

A knight, in the old English, is a servant, a disciple who attends to the defense of their sovereign. As presented earlier, it represents an act of obedience without expectation of reward.

Many look up to the Jedi Knight—yet fail to grasp what it is all about. The truth is many have done the very opposite of what they strive to become. Instead of standing in faith, many have slowly compromised their beliefs in order to blend with the sway of the crowd. Instead of keeping to the path the Master has showed us—many have twisted it in order to force it into a common mold.

Do you know why his message will succeed? It is because the Father is greater than any of us. He gives wisdom to those who respect him and obey his commands. To others—those who spit at him and poke at his face—he gives delusions.

What Shaul says to Thessalonika should be taken seriously at this time. “Those who do not receive the love of the truth will be given a strong delusion, that they should believe a lie—yet for those who have accepted the Father’s direction, he gives hope and comfort, establishing every good word and work.”

Today has reminded this person what it means to be comforted by the Father—to let go of how one thinks it should work out. We must let him guide our actions.

Do you remember the story when the disciples were fishing in their boat? After fishing all night with no results, Yahshua tells them exactly when and how to cast their net. It is at that moment they caught all the fish they could carry.

To become fishers of men, we must ask ourselves the following questions—how are we casting his net? Are we doing so in obedience? Are we standing in faith, allowing his words alone to grant us success—not our own? Or are we attempting to serve with the expectation that our own strength will succeed?

By the fruits you will know.

The Duel in the Clouds

4/26/2018

We are going to briefly dig deep here concerning this epic scene in movie history.

The reason why so many today are fickle, moving quickly from one fixation to the next (without any real satisfaction), is because, they, on their own, cannot find the deeper meaning of acceptance. The Father alone provides this.

Why is this truth so important when analysing this scene? Let's find out.

Luke Skywalker is a character desperately seeking the father figure. You can see this in his relationships with Owen Lars, Ben Kenobi, Yoda, and, ultimately, Anakin Skywalker. The lighted suns on Tatooine, for instance, are a visual depiction of a longing for deep relationship between father and son. One sun is darker (older) in giving its light, while the other is lighter (younger). It is no coincidence that this particular scene is shown right after Luke's reprimanding for displaying his father's longing to explore the galaxy.

For thousands of years, the sun has been a source of stability upon Earth, while the moon has been a consistent sign of guardianship. These objects are meant to teach how the Father gives us stability in our lives. In the script, he is known as the bridegroom (the Psalms, Isaiah, Jeremiah, the Gospels). His chosen people, who are represented as the bride, are to be the guardians of peace and justice—especially during dark times. The messiah, on the other hand, is represented as the bright and morning star (Revelation 22)—his offspring are to be as the stars of sky and as the sand on the seashore (Genesis 22).

Luke, the first name for the main character in Star Wars, is essentially the same name for Lucas (Luke means Luqas in Hebrew, or Loukas). The name means light, or, in deeper context, light giver. This is an important connection to grasp in spiritually understanding the story of Star Wars.

George Lucas was fascinated with light and reflection in his early works—you can see this throughout his early short films, such as Look at Life, Freiheit, and Electronic Labyrinth: THX 1138 4EB. This fascination led to effective lighting techniques that were displayed in his film debut THX 1138.

LUH, a main character in THX-1138 movie, reflected a deep relational need within a dystopian future. This act eventually brought awareness to the THX character. Yes—LUH is another code name for Lucas, just as the name Luke is in Star Wars.

The reason why George Lucas succeeded in film is because he lived according to his purpose, which was written upon his own name. You will find that those who truly live according to their written purpose will always find success in their endeavours.

As most are aware, Luke Skywalker's name was originally meant to be Luke Starkiller. Stars in scripture (as was hinted prior) are a direct reference to angels and spiritual principalities. This is made clear in the beginning words of the book of Revelation (or the revealing). In Judge 5, for instance, it states that the stars from heaven fought from their courses. This is a battle idiom reference.

Luke is a slayer of angels, and is, in essence, angelic. Pay close attention, for example, when Luke loses his focus due to pride in his abilities—quickly he is dropped from the stairs of elevation to be stomped down by the Dark Lord during their first lightsaber scene.

Pride is a deadly vice that cripples angelic beings. Lucifer, who was to be an angel of light, fell from grace—this was due to his arrogant, selfish takeover attempt of the Father's dominion. Not only he, but also a third of the stars (angels) fell from heaven and were casted upon the Earth (Revelation 12).

Darth Vader, on the other hand, is a representation of the Dark Father (Satan) who has quenched the true, yet forgotten Father. It is said, according to Shmi Skywalker in the Prequels, that Anakin Skywalker had no father. This loss of the father figure eventually leads him down a dark path of pride and selfishness.

Isaiah 14 states, “For you have said in your heart, I will ascend into heaven; I will exalt my throne above the stars of Yah; I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north; I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the most High.” With this motive reviled, it is declared that “He shall be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit.”

Is this not what also happened to Darth Vader, as he was cut down and burnt at the lava pits of Mustafar?

Vader ascends further into darkness by hunting down the Jedi—and although he attempts to ascend within the city of the clouds (“altering its deed”) to capture Luke Skywalker, his self-induced pain takes him right back to the pit of his initial scaring.

Cloud City is a city of merchandise—a place for buying and selling where no one wants to be found. It is here which Vader attempts to buy Luke’s favor with the ways of darkness.

“By the multitude of thy merchandise they have filled the midst of you with violence,” speaks Ezekiel, “and you have sinned: therefore I will cast you as profane out of the mountain of Yah: and I will destroy you covering cherub, from the midst of the stones of fire.”

Precious (living) stones, in scripture, refer to a special, chosen group of people. Anakin Skywalker was once a previous stone of the Jedi—he was a bright star within their order. Yet now, as Vader, he is tainted with the role of the golem.

A golem (in Jewish legend) is a demonic mud-like creature manipulated by an enlightened human. Activation letters were placed on the creature, which, once removed, would render its usefulness. We can see this with Vader’s priest-like breastplate and garments—symbols which heavily depict the Emperor Palpatine’s hold upon him.

Let’s now take a look at the lightsabers.

Each wielder (Luke Skywalker and Darth Vader) holds a spiritual powered flame. These sabers are a visual representation of a battle sword called the katana—which is, of itself, representative of the bokken, or rod. This is quite similar to the tool of a shepherd.

In fact, these two fighters are representative of shepherds. They are, in essence, fighting over the flock with their rods—the flock being the galaxy itself. Whose tapping will turn the tide—will it be the one who rules by prideful strength or the other which leads by selfless service? We will go further into this subject later on in the Jedihood message.

The carbonite chamber itself has its own special interpretation. Vader desires to seal Luke as a possessed prize—similar to how he wanted to preserve Padme from death. We soon find that this device does not work as Luke quickly uses his abilities to escape its clutch. The chamber also mirrors the meditation chamber Vader uses to take off his helmet.

Wrote an online lecture years ago called Frozen In Carbonite. “Stuck in the past,” it says, “carbonite seals us from the outside world...as well as protects us. [...] It seems that we are the product.”

This chamber, as spoken about in scripture, also acts as hiding place of conflict. Yahshua states that there will be false messiahs and prophets who will seek vain directions, giving false meditation in secret places. “If they shall say to you, ‘behold, he is in the desert’—go not forth: ‘behold, he is in the secret chambers’—do not believe it” (Matthew 24).

The Father’s glory is to be shined openly upon the world.

This duel in the clouds depicts an inner conflict which resides within the soul of fallen man. We must not allow the sway of darkness creep within—we must stand strong to the ways of righteousness.

It is far better to let go of the self, as Luke did, than to succumb to its prideful means.

Maturing Terms

Let us go over some common terms which are associated to the Jedi—terms which depict matured, spiritual attributes.

Sadly the physical aspect has taken great precedence over the spiritual in recent years, creating unnatural doctrine, mass confusion, and unhealthy living. The script consistently reminds us not to worship the object—we are to simply understand the object lessons of what they attempting to teach.

You will find that the many controversies our society faces today are due to the vast inner battles we struggle to personally overcome. Because we are not able to confront these battles within, they eventually manifest upon the physical realm. This is why prayer and fasting is of such importance at this time—for the chosen are to properly differentiate between the holy and the profane. Any dilution of these acts will result in vain practices and confusion.

With that said, here are some commonly associated terms.

Temple (usually referred to as The Jedi Temple):

The temple is the mind and body of the spirit. Many look too much for the physical places, yet do not understand that without the spirit of holiness, the building is dead. The temple is to be cleansed within—without the breath of fire, and true dedication, we are building an empty shell (those who have an ear should hear).

Order (aka The Jedi Order):

The order is the unadulterated directive of the Father to perform without hesitation or complaint. So many people turn to man-inspired writings for purpose and direction, serving them without question—this act further leads them astray towards destruction. Remember this—if the Father does not speak in the words, this is because there is no light in them. We must learn to respect the Master over the masses of those who may say they speak for him, yet do not follow his commands.

Council (aka The Jedi Council):

The council of the spirit is confirmed in witnesses. It is not a building of great leaders by reputation—it is displayed those who lead a life of prime example, walking in spiritual truth. Many today speak so passionately about their wanton lusts and desires—all while darkening the counsel of the Spirit without knowledge. As the Father said in the book of Job, “stand up like a man and answer only to that which you are given”—otherwise, we ought to refrain. To know, in the relational sense, is the true meaning of the word Jedi.

Code (aka The Jedi Code):

The code represents a compilation of commands the Father has given. In Psalms 119, this is also known as his precepts, his word, his testimonies, his statutes, and his ways. The intimate relationship between principle and its true source is essential—once this connection is removed, it is quite easy to stumble and fall. A group or body, for example, can easily tell you what they think is right and wrong—yet if they do not recognize the origin of its morality and legality (the true source of life), these thoughts will eventually be twisted, leading massive crowds towards the ways of death. Again, let it be stated—such actions will lead towards the ways of death.

Creed (aka The Jedi Creed, as was coined by the website):

The creed is a public statement of faith backed by action. Many are way too busy telling people their own personal interpretations and perspectives, while, at the same time, are not successfully performing and confirming the practice to be Spirit led. Do not be so quick to state your observations until you have faithfully performed.

Compass (aka The Jedi Compass, as it has been coined):

The compass is the true guide and shepherd who will lead us home. The word of the Father is as a lamp unto the feet and a light unto the path—he leads to green pastures and still waters, restoring the soul (Psalms 23). When the Master's rod and staff is absent, we will naturally walk away lost in a world of wolves. If any are straying away from his words, do not blame the Father if you get into trouble—call out for wholesome guidance.

Gathering (aka The Jedi Gathering, as it has been coined):

The gathering is the calling and meeting place in which his people are to be herded. Many focus way too much on finding peaceful abodes for appointed meetings—yet do not reserve their souls for the appointed times of his influence. Remember this—when two or more are gathered in his name, he will make himself known to them. If we simply gather to make names for ourselves, it will only lead to more babble (as is referenced with Babylon).

Again, these are the matured meanings. Do not focus on the object to save you—understand its purpose. Allow this time to set your house in commune with the Father and his kingdom. Are we willing to tear down the towers of vanity and go back home?

These communities will continue to stray until it learns to cry out, “Blessed are the Father and his chosen.”

Seeking Opinions

5/1/2018

When you truly hear the Father's voice, he will lead you to say things that are not necessary accepted by the world. This is why the Jedihood message is not here to present personal views, or to ride the fence in fear of offending a party.

This message is here to share the truth—even if it isolates its giver.

In the book of Proverbs, it says “a fool has no delight in understanding, but that his heart may discover itself.” How many out there are seeking to discover themselves instead of true understanding? Would say that is the case for most.

“Do not be conformed to this world,” says Shaul to the Romans, “yet be transformed by the renewing of your mind—that you may prove what is the good, acceptable, and perfect will of the Father.”

Wisdom is not based on the gaining of perspectives, or even the self-discovery of your own views. These are vain things. A forum of discussions may have its time and place—yet when it becomes the overall focus of the way, then you will be heading for trouble. Let's be honest with ourselves—we have all seen this happen year in and year out.

“Wide and broad is the way which leads to destruction,” says Yahshua, “and many there be which go there. Yet straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leads to life—and few there be that find it” (Matthew 7).

True wisdom is after seeking the path of the Father—not the path of opinions. Opinions will come and go—they can be deceiving and change at a moment's notice. We must never rely on shallow doctrines.

Let us not forget the devices of Senator Palpatine.

Palpatine is associated with the word palpable, or palette—in other words, the taste buds. His perceptible and ear-itching words swayed the Senate to invoke Empire rule, easily manipulating the opinions of the crowd to create his Sith order.

How did he do this? He simply gave them what they wanted to hear.

Ask yourself—are you merely hearing from those according to what you want to hear? If you are, you are on dangerous ground.

This is a question we all must ask—we must ask this very thing upon our hearts. Are we manipulating our opinions to create a personal order within us, instead of listening to the Father's order? Are we listening to our own doctrines instead of following the true path?

If this is the case with you, know that you will lose the battles you face even before you have begun—for the gradual, subtle ways of in'sidious'ness has taken over. Your opinions, in essence, will lead to the manipulation of not only countless others, yet your own self.

We must remember that opinions are personal judgments which are not necessarily backed by knowledge or credibility. This is why they are open to much dispute when shown in the light.

It is as the foolish man who builds his house upon the sand (Matthew 7).

Therefore, we must be careful not to seek advice provided from mere perspective—for Master Worldly Wiseman, who resides in the great town of Carnal Policy, will advise you to seek the path of easement at reasonable rates (Pilgrim's Progress).

Don't be deceived—seek the unshaken confidence of the Father and his righteousness. Only in him will you find wisdom.

Closed Doors

In order to go forward, one must be willing to let go of their previous ways—for every door that fully opens, certain doors must eventually close.

So many believe that advancement can be made by simply ignoring prior behaviors—that to show a sincere regret of past actions is enough by itself. The consequences, though, still remain. By allowing deadly portals continued access into our lives, many are, in essence, jeopardizing the homebound journey.

We must also learn to close the doors of ourselves—for the self can lead us astray towards false devices.

In Isaiah 26, the Father says, “Come, my people, and enter into your rooms and close your doors behind you—hide for a little while until indignation runs its course.” At one point, Ezekiel is told to shut himself in his house—this allows the Father to speak (through his mouth) to the rebellious house.

For the chosen ones out there: Be aware of the dark forces which go against the calling the Father has given you. These forces will try to find a back door to trap you—they will seek whatever exploits possible to shut you down.

This is when you must stand strong, guarding the entrances to your soul.

Pick up the sword of truth you have been given and fight faithfully—do not give in to the wiles of the devil. “For we wrestle not against flesh and blood,” it says in the letter to the Ephesians, “but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world—against spiritual wickedness in high places.”

Remember that it is not always the person which speaks—it is also the spirit which they are under. We must know who our enemy is, faithfully denying the strongholds of darkness.

We must shut these doors and allow the Master to take over—for if the Father is to indeed guide our actions, we must also allow him to also guard the doorways to his temple.

It's About Relationship, Not Religion

5/12/2018

A core aspect of the Jedihood message is the importance of trust and relationship with the Father.

Many have turned to religion in order to fill their void—they do this while failing to see that its reliance brings about an untrustworthy, worldly system.

We cannot turn to man-made mountains and expect them to support us without exploitation. This reinforcement of the legion eventually leads to a process willing to do anything to extort its power base.

This is why we desperately need a direct connection—not one that is solely dependent on man's interpretation. It is our presumptions which have confused truth to be mere conjecture, blending legitimacy with theory. This gives rise to suppositions which are prone to error.

When watching the Star Wars Prequels, it is easy to see how corruption entered the halls of the Jedi Order. It was not just the manipulation of Darth Sidious (insidiousness) which led to its downfall—yet also the feeble, incompetent responses of its own council, giving rise to force users such as Darth Tyrannus and Darth Vader. The representatives within the Order were blinded by their own pompousness.

The situation is somewhat similar to King Belshazzar and his final moments in ruling Babylon, as written about in scripture (Daniel 5). It was his overconfidence and sinister pomp which failed to see the Father's writing on the wall—for in that very night he was slain by the Medes.

Today, many have allowed the tyrant (Darth Tyrannus) and the father of darkness (Darth Vader) to prevail in their actions, allowing insidiousness (Darth Sidious) to maul wedges (Darth Maul) into their faith. This is the time for those of us to turn to the Father, the source of life, and ask for him to be with us.

We cannot enforce a truth based upon of our own selves—we need a relationship that is incorruptible, one that is “merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth—keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty” (Exodus 34).

The Father wants to provide for those able ones who respect him—people of truth who hate covetousness—and place them as rulers instead of the proud (Exodus 18). They, in turn, must act on the Father’s behalf—not their own.

By turning to the holy mountain, they avoid the temptations of the legion. The void is made satisfied—the covenant is renewed.

We must allow the Master to point out the corruption within us—with his healing power he will create an incorruptible spirit. In so doing, let us turn from our ways—the doctrines of fallen man—and find true relationship with him.

“He is the rock and his work is perfect” (Deuteronomy 32).

Why the New Star Wars Movies Have Failed

Although it is still hard for some to swallow, the Star Wars Sequel movies have epically failed on many levels, especially 'The Last' film.

There are many websites and videos which have voiced this—though some of you are still wondering why it has gotten so bad. How can something which attempted to be trendy, fashionable, and fresh sting so many of its original fanbase? Why are these stories being so poorly presented? How did we arrive here in the first place?

The same can actually be said with many of today's films. The medium has been so focused on depicting grandiose scenes of jaw dropping magnitude that it hardly knows how to tell a decent story anymore.

These current story treatments are mirrors of our current society. We live in a world today which wants to arrive at the destination without fully working toward the destined path. Many in our society are lazy, wanting the easy way out of responsibilities. Instead of putting in the investment, many constantly throw their lives away for temporary pleasures.

Older movies, such as The Seven Samurai, show a time period in which unseen heroes risked their lives to impose the roles they have been given—the task to save a group of innocent bystanders from the clutch of evil bandits. Today, displaying such virtues is looked upon as 'uncool' by most, let alone old fashioned.

Many have credited the success of the original Star Wars story to the faithful depiction of the Hero's Journey, a term coined by Joseph Campbell (which George Lucas studied). Campbell found common motifs in heroic, mythical stories, such as the call to adventure, supernatural aid, and the challenge brought through a series of feats.

Some have even quoted that many successful films, such as The Road Warrior, The Matrix, The Wizard of Oz, Lord of the Rings, and even The Karate Kid, as successfully depicting this ancient story arch within their scripts.

This ancient storytelling has a different origin than some would care to admit—for its prototype comes directly from the scripture themselves. In fact, it essentially comes from the story of Moses, or Moshe, found in the first five books of the Bible known as the Torah.

The Torah, in the Hebrew language, means the instructions—or, in other words, the guide and teacher—it is also known as the direction, the path, and the compass. The Jedihood message refers to it as the script, or scriptures.

Picture the Torah, for example, as an archery instructor, someone who shows you how to shoot the arrow right to the center of the mark or target. The Torah is the Father's blueprint, an instructional guidebook which faithfully shows how to follow the path.

Many of us want to figure things out for ourselves without paying attention to directions. When it comes to our purpose and destiny—many of us wonder why we fail so miserably. The answer is simple. If we can't even obey our parents, or love our brother as ourselves, how can we fully listen to our calling?

Each of these instructional books has a purpose. Genesis, the first book, is a prequel story which briefly explains the history of a chosen generation. We are then led up to the major conflict of Exodus—a battle between Moses and Pharaoh, of Yah and the false gods of Egypt. This is then followed by the books of Leviticus and Numbers—books which presents a series of instructions and trials. The Torah then concludes with Deuteronomy, which is a reiteration (pep talk if you will) of what was already learned.

These books then take us to Joshua, a man who faithfully brings the Israelites into the Promise Land.

Star Wars has the basic formula which the Torah originated. The original movie begins with Episode IV, depicting a series of battles which the heroes succeed when facing the Empire (Exodus). In The Empire Strikes Back, we find our heroes in conflict—Luke Skywalker gains instruction from Yoda (Leviticus), eventually dueling against Darth Vader yet fails in his efforts (Numbers). By the time of Return of the Jedi, we see our heroes confronting what they have learned by faithfully completing certain tasks (Deuteronomy). This allows the destruction of the Empire to bring renewal to the galaxy (Joshua). The Prequels, in turn, were eventually made to explain the origin of the first three Star Wars movies (Genesis).

The sequels though have failed in this adaptation. Sadly, if they would have paid attention, they would have known the original formula.

This leads us to the book of Judges. Judges is basically a set of stories which speak of heroes who are called to defend their land. They are, in many respects, the Jedi of the scriptures. This message will speak more about this particular book in the future, showing how it is a key which unlocks understanding concerning the Jedi role.

The script is meant to be played out in today's world. In short, there are certain people who are meant to be challenged—to be taken out of their comfort zone to show their the fruit and talents to the Master. That is why stories which connect their storytelling with scripture are so powerful.

Will these chosen ones be faithful? We will find out.

The Great Famine

What is most troubling about the current state of society is the increased scarcity of spiritual truth. In the scriptures, this was known as an early indicator prior to judgments that would come upon the land.

Just as Moses warns in Deuteronomy 28—curses, such as the fruit of the body (infertility), the increase of disease (scabs, botches, and soreness), and the increase of separation (another man with another's wife) is becoming more prominent in a world many appear to see as improving. Our sons and daughters are being given to others to control—all the while we hold onto “a trembling heart, a failing of eyes, and a sorrow of mind.”

In essence, many have not increased due to the allowance of plagues into our camps. Many do not hearken diligently to the voice of the Father—because of this many have degraded themselves, walking along the path towards death. Many have neglected in hearing the order.

The Jedi, as we soon discover in Star Wars, always suffered duress and confusion when they failed to hear the calling and follow the order—when the Jedi faltered, so did the people (along with the entire galaxy).

We also see this with the legends of the Knights of the Round Table. When the protectors were sidetracked with personal lusts, the land greatly suffered with injustice and despair—yet, when they humbled themselves and brought redemption to their camps, the land was healed.

Many have failed in grasping these important lessons. Because of the inability to respond, many have allowed son of Dracul (the dragon, i.e. Count Dooku) to separate them into factions—all hiding under the guise of merchandised trade. As it says in Ezekiel 28, “by the multitude of your merchandise they have filled the midst of you with violence, and you have sinned—therefore, I will cast you as profane out of the mountain of Elohim.”

“Because you have set your heart as the heart of Elohim—behold, therefore will I bring strangers upon you, the terrible of the nations—and they will draw their swords against the beauty of your wisdom.”

Is this not what happened in Star Wars? Is this not what is happening today?

If we are to survive this hunger, we must turn away from the gods we have created in ourselves—and instead of following our current orientation, return once again to our true origination.

Will we listen to the call?

It Will Be A Hard Life

5/25/2018

Remember watching the Qui-Gon destiny poem when The Phantom Menace was released. Still think of these words often.

For those of you who don't know the poem, it goes like this:

It will be a hard life.

One without reward—without remorse—without regret.

A path will be placed before you. The choice—is yours alone.

Do what you think you cannot do.

It will be a hard life. But you will find out—who you are.

The Father has provided some of us great blessings which many have taken for granted. Because of these foolish choices, many have been led astray from the destined path. Many have also chosen a life of instant gratification, and, in doing so, eventually live a life of despair and disappointment.

Destiny is not based on human reasoning or emotion—it is based on the attuned awareness of direction, as provided by the Father. There are plenty of markers and warning signs throughout our lives which many have ignored. The more these signs are ignored, the further away people will stray from their purpose—they will pay less and less attention to the guilt that is eating away at them.

Today, we find large herds of people who have chosen the life of a drone—drones, who say they are free, yet all fall under the beat of the same monotonous drum. These herds are ever marching forward along the broad way toward destruction.

Many have rationalized that just because everyone else is marching towards the same ditch, the path, therefore, must be true. This, though, is not the case. The beginning may seem like an easier hike—yet, due to the lack of friction, many become lax and soft, neglecting sound principle and judgment.

On the other hand, the straight and narrow path is hard and very challenging—yet it is this challenge which shows us who we are.

The Jedihood message acts as measuring rod to those who may say they practice similar ways as the Jedi... yet do not live by it. Instead of following the standard, many continue to follow the crowd and do not purge their vanities. Yes, it is their choice—yet let it be known that this choice is the path of death.

Those who choose to walk in humbleness—letting go of the towers of pride and rebelliousness—will learn how to kneel. And, by kneeling, they are able to be knighted.

This is a call to action.

Walls Will Fall Down

6/7/2018

Like most of you, have been following what has been going on with Lucasfilm—as well as a large part of its fanbase going against what they are doing. The rest of my family have just recently found out about this (the media has attempted to cover much of this up).

It's getting pretty bad though. Star Wars has officially produced its first box office bomb.

Some Star Wars fans may think their message has been sent—many believe their boycotts will create enough friction for LucasFilm to change its ways. Sadly, it will not be that simple. As was said in the video series, it is more than just Lucasfilm. You are dealing with a power base which goes beyond money—a spiritual influence that has been in our society since the beginning.

The Father showed some years ago that hearts will remain hardened, just as it is with certain communities. Many will remain blind to their degradation—the reason for this is to fulfill a judgment.

Jedihood will remain camped outside as this continues, warning the chosen to get out while you still can—because, in the end, these man-made towers will eventually collapse.

Pride always comes before the fall. It always has—it always will.

Vices (Part 1)

This person has been having a series of dreams the last two nights—they have led me to speak about the following subject:

The Jedihood message speaks of virtue and honor—the behavior of depicting the highest standard. Over time, as this standard has been publicly thwarted, many have failed to recognize the methods in which this has been accomplished.

This has been accomplished through vices. Many of us have been taught that certain vices they practice are perfectly normal—that they are socially acceptable and have no real consequences associated to them. This, of course, is not true—which is why we see those around us fall prey to them.

In fact, these vices have such a subtlety it is hard for even the most prudent to discern it.

When testing those who call themselves Jedi, you will find these dishonorable spirits are still being revealed within a great number of them. Finding such a spirit should help us realize that this is based on a private matter—for it informs us of the inner state of where people are currently. Given this, we must be careful in how we respond to it.

This is yet another reason why we must be careful not to amalgamate all these spirits together and call it the Force. When you eat from the tree of good and evil, you are lead to the curse.

If the Father unveils any of the following vices, especially if it is found within, it is the duty of the chosen to meditate and pray about it—asking for correctness and wisdom. We will be given wisdom if we sincerely ask for it.

So here we go.

Covetousness:

This is a strong desire for the possession of worldly things. This is usually equated to idolatry, or object worship, yet also stems from other desires which separate us from higher principle—such as the unhealthy yearning of a selfish character from those around us. The desire to influence others, all while accumulating their wealth through usury, is an indicator of this spirit. Jediism—especially one particular sect—is very much involved in this.

Wickedness:

This is twisting of the directed path the Father has given. The word ‘wicked’ is based off of the word ‘wick’ from the candle. People would twist the wick so that the fuel (oil) could be better supplied to the flame. Just as a carpet react to a strong water leak—there is a gradual damage which seeps further and further into the facility. People have used the Star Wars movies, for example, to twist the directive to suit their personal preferences, especially paths which lead to distorted truths. This has created a gradual damage—leading to the decay of foundational truth within the house of certain communities.

Backbiting:

This is intentional attacking of someone’s character behind their back. This spirit is rather frequent in today’s world and poses as common tactic—especially with those who have purposely placed themselves in online garb in order to defame the absent so they cannot defend themselves. This detracts from the creditability of their words, attacking the messenger and not the actual message. Usually you will see this activity when people cannot openly discredit the message, and, in turn, further validates the message itself. Just as a dog which bites behind the back—we must be careful not to give into this animalistic, vile spirit. It is the path to darkness.

Strife:

This is an infuriation of bitterness when in disagreement over fundamental issues. Having disagreement is acceptable—yet when such debate leads to unbalanced anger, focusing strictly on self preservation, this gives into a spirit which will separate you from uncovering truths. It creates unhealthy grudges, leading the tongue to act in misjudgment. We must uncover this unfriendly spirit and call it out from among us.

Haughtiness:

This is the attitude of being disdainfully proud, leading to presumptive thinking and cynical insensitivity. In the scriptures, the Hebrew word 'gaba' comes from this type of arrogance, meaning 'to be high.' Just as with physical vices—such as narcotics and fermented substances—spiritual vices can create a sense of superiority with aftereffects which sting like an adder. We must not tarry with this spirit. If you find this spirit from within your gates, fall in humility to the Father—ask for strength to overcome this vicious attacker.

There are many more vices which we will bring up later. For now, let us stop here.

If any of you wish to discuss these matters, feel free to contact jedi@jedihood.com.

Let us continue where we left off regarding the recognition of spiritual vices.

Daily behavior is a testament towards applying belief. In essence, faith has everything to do with application. While many may speak of various truths, it is the fruit of the spirit which speaks much louder than their words.

Teaching comes from living. What many fail to understand is that habitual acts of a mature, consistent direction are, at the very heart, a sincere guidance. The lack of maturity, on the other hand, reflects a deliberate trapping. It is important to distinguish which is which.

A good example of this is the doctrinal maxims of Jediism. We see the preaching of justice, courage, and loyalty—yet if, at the very heart of the movement, you see a lifestyle which does not seek the path of righteousness (yet tolerance), giving into tactics of cowardice instead of virtuous acts of bravery—you know the practice is deeply flawed.

Virtue comes from daily commitment, a seriousness of mind— as Yoda put it—not a casual, spoken recital. We do not see many forms of this seriousness today—yet a whimsical, negligent nature that has corrupted the very minds of its converts.

This is why this person is going to continue to reveal the spirits of corruption. By doing so, we will find a distinctive separation from what may appear to be virtuous to that which clearly is.

So let us continue.

Scorn:

This is the active approach of treating someone as worthless. This especially occurs with elders, the weak, or those with very unpopular viewpoints. This pompous act of disrespect and mistreatment is an early indicator of a movement that will degrade itself within a few generations—for the very people in charge will eventually be decapitated by their followers. If you are under the tutorage of someone who practices this vice, leave immediately—you do not want this spirit imparted on you. Impartation is real and can negatively affect the rest of your life.

Maliciousness:

This is the express intention of causing unjustified harm to another person. Many see this through solely a physical lens—yet there is also a strong spiritual undercurrent as well. When an unnatural enmity has increased—to a point of hatred and cursing towards a fellow neighbor, friend, or brother/sister—we must recognize this to be sign of an inner desire to commit evil. That is why it important that judgment stems on holiness, not personal vengeance.

Boasting:

This is the excessive bragging about personal experiences and skills achieved, especially when they do not warrant such praise. Like the flexing of muscles upon the mirrors of the audience—we have been taught that it is socially acceptable to gloat our natural given abilities. It is the sign of the nakedness within the inner soul, the striping away of dignity in order to advertise unclean spirits. If one's greatest merits have to be constantly displayed in order to be recognized, you have a serious problem.

Foolishness:

This is a strong lack of good sense, or reckless judgment. This unhealthy vice will attack you consistently—especially if it knows it can weaken you towards walking into the very traps you just got out of. People are quick to flock towards leadership yet do not test them on their spiritual sight (or lack thereof). As Obi-Wan stated, “Who is the more foolish, the fool or the fool who follows him?” The Father’s wisdom is especially important—it will faithfully show what works without having to personally experience it. You do not have to drink alcohol, for instance, to know the damage it does to the living filter we call the liver. When you live in holiness, you realize your body is not your own.

Deceit:

This is the deliberate act of concealing a truth in order to mislead others. Many people have used the Jedi path in order to push a personal or political agenda, just as we see with the LucasFilm and the Star Wars franchise today. Over time, this deception eventually shows its fruit. If we are truly following the path of rightness, we should be able discern this carnal practice and warn others about it—which is what this message is essentially doing. “If you do not stand up for something,” as it is said, “you will fall for anything.”

These vices, and many others, will stop you from finding the homeward path. We must learn to recognize what these spirits are doing in our lives. Call out to the Father for wisdom and it will be given. If, at our core, we find a practice which directly compromises foundational truth, we must pray wholesomely for its removal.

If any of you wish to discuss these matters, feel free to contact jedi@jedihood.com.

Tough Love

This person was finally able to take a week off from work—have spent half of it so far by pulling weeds, with the other half cleaning items in the garage. This is not to gloat—it is a good practice to get the physical house in order prior to speaking about setting one's house in order. The mind has to be sober.

When pointing the finger outside, it is good to be reminded of the three small fingers which are pointing inside. There are certain individuals (people who are chosen for the task at hand) who are to hold themselves to a much higher standard than the one they present.

It is easy to tell ourselves, "Everyone makes mistakes." Although we may see many fail in a task, this does not mean it is right for us to do the same—it does not give us the entitlement to lower the standard for everyone's acceptance.

Instead of being so quick to reference the 'J' word, it is best to practice and show what it means by living the lifestyle through and through—hence the message which is being shared. It acts as a rod (a bokken or yard stick, if you will) and, at times, will be very hard to accept. This is not only to test your endurance, yet to challenge you to see if you are expected to perform a higher calling.

Without challenge, there is no learning—there is no award given. As the saying goes, "Experience is a hard teacher—it gives the test first, then the lesson afterward."

In fact, what we need from the Father today is a tough love. We need a toughness that is not abusive—not the sickly form of softness we see in our culture today. As any good father should, the Father chastises those he loves (look up Jeremiah 31, 2nd Samuel 7, and Hebrews 12). It is a sign of a committed servant.

On the other hand, we find many in our current society who cannot deal with difficulties or hardship—quickly snapping when things don't work the way they want. This is a sign of a rebellious servant (Matthew 18 and 25).

Let us see the greater wisdom in our trials. The Father will teach the way within our lives—that is, if we listen, willingly going through his teachings with humility and attentiveness. He will ingrain himself upon us, helping us to withstand the harshest conditions.

Here It Comes

This has been a difficult year so far—it is not easy to provide an unpopular message to warn of an upcoming judgment. Yet, as we see the pieces fall outside the doorstep, others are slowly coming to this realization.

At the very least (when it is all said and done) the responsibility to give warning has been fulfilled.

The plummet of Star Wars this year is merely the catalyst which confirms the validity of this message. Given the many groups dependent upon its success, its continued rejection will stem an apathy which will shake their core foundations.

For the first time in many people's lives, we are witnessing a world in which the myth isn't enjoyable anymore. The tables, essentially, are turning.

Not much is needed to be said regarding this phenomenon—more and more are seeing it for themselves. There are those who could have taken notice of this many years ago (they had some warning then), yet have been foolish to follow the path of the blind.

The situation brings remembrance of a community someone had attempted to create some years back. It was a wonderful, interactive site—yet no one came to interact, even though the very process had been successful seven years prior. The reason for this is simple—not only have the people changed, yet the very inspiration itself.

There will be those who will continue to rely on their prior successes, hoping to turn the curve. That turn, for many, will not show itself.

The Father has pointed out a sifting process that is occurring—he is looking for those who earnestly seek the truth, allowing this situation to become a stumbling block for those who cannot hear his voice.

With that said, it is my sincere prayer many more will come to this understanding.

It is time to go back home.

All Leaves, No Fruit

7/1/2018

Actions speak louder than words. Just as a tree is identified by its fruit, one can identify a spirit within people's actions.

As Yahshua says in the book of Matthew, "by your fruits you shall know them. Every good tree brings forth good fruit—yet the tree that does not bear good fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire."

This person has looked upon groups who depict a welcoming appearance (decorated by honorable words, creeds, maxims, and so forth)—yet, just as the Pharisees in Yahshua's time, see large, fluttering tassels with a pompous arrogance. Also see an aura of blatant ignorance—that all is well and good in the bubble.

It is very distasteful to find this—hence the lack of personal visitation.

The script warns us that we are not to touch the profane thing, nor eat from the corrupted tree. "For the ax is already at the root of the trees," as said the Baptist.

A spirit has come which will burn the chaff with unquenchable fire. Although these trees decoratively covered themselves with leaves, they will not be able to cover their real nakedness—that being their lack of nourishing fruit.

There is a sincere hunger out there—there are still a few here and there who desperately desire to know the truth and walk the path of honor and virtue. With this said, this desire cannot be quenched unless there is a humble walking in righteousness. Without relationship, there is no release.

So many have turned their souls away from the Father—finding 'this' and 'that' way to excuse their actions. In effect, many have strayed far from the way.

What we do not need right now is yet another way—not another tree filled with leaves, yet no good fruit. What is needed is for his chosen to go back to the way which was lost—the one before we attempted to hide ourselves, covering our nakedness.

Are there some out there humble to ask for forgiveness?

His spirit is willing to forgive—yet we must be willing to kneel. It is this very act which will save us.

Frozen in Carbonite

The following is a revisit of an early writing given eighteen years ago. Here it is in its updated form:

Many are stuck in a spiritual bind. Unable to move from their current state of dismay, they wait patiently for deliverance—yet their hearts remain cold, indifferent. Unable to adapt, they quickly block themselves from the inside out. A suspended animation persists.

Carbonite is a very useful element in Star Wars—used to preserve, protect, and transport resources more efficiently. Yet the effects it has on humans can be detrimental. Things can go wrong in the carbon-freezing process—it can kill people, separate family and friends. It can act as a manipulative tool, leading people into darkness. Its goal can essentially be to create a human encasement—one which dictated by the monetary exchange of flesh and blood.

There are so many who are spiritually frozen in such an element. They have become a product—a favorite display piece for someone else's decor. Driven by financiers, they remain silent of their condition as the gang surrounds them. There may be a grown content from living inside this solid-gas bubble, yet it acts as nothing more than the intentional stalling of personal growth.

Awakening people from such suspended animation can be difficult. Various side-effects can result, such as blindness, dizziness, memory loss, and mild unconsciousness. There is a heavy shaking—a blurred realization of a world they have returned to.

It can be a confusing moment in time. Can one adapt to this new change?

Yet know there is someone on the other side—a Father who earnestly cares and seeks a renewal of relationship. He will rescue us from the cold, metal monolith, yet our spirit must earnestly desire this freedom.

Are you frozen in carbonite?

A Matter of Discipline

Today, our world is quite eager towards creating endless amounts of new rules and requirements—whether it is social, governmental, or religious, a plethora of new procedures keeps coming our way.

This is not to say having laws are evil (far from it). What had led us though to problems is the extreme focus on its new construction and interpretation—this is in contrast to the spirit of disobedience, or the lack of enforcing the ancient laws we have already been given.

It all comes down to a matter of discipline—or, in essence, the practice of dedicating one's self to meaningful action. People naturally relate to its performance—yet they need living examples, living testaments of those who follow a higher standard.

A standard, in ancient times, was a banner or staff pole which was lifted up in order to display a particular authority—it was a message which communicated there was an incoming order. This is a time though for certain individuals to become a living standard—to live and do as they are asked by the Father.

Instead of allowing false images to be displayed, why aren't we all living a true display?

Belief is not merely a word set in codes and creeds—it is an act of being willing, ready, and able to do what is right. Belief is also a performance which is to be displayed in full confidence—executed faithfully even while others ignore it.

In the book of Leviticus, for instance, we find three distinct categories: the unclean, the clean, and the holy. Although cleanliness separates the holy from the profane, it is holiness that truly brings about right-living and purpose.

The spirit of holiness (Ruach) is also known to be qodesh (a Hebrew word which means set-apart, separated, and divinely sacred). This spirit is able to live in those who walk according to the Father's ways. Very few, though, enter its holy place—yet it is this very obedience performed which saves the camp.

Let us hope to find such servants.

Judgment Call

7/17/2018

Going to go ahead and revisit a truth that was mentioned earlier in this message. We will also look upon this truth with further detail.

There are many out there who ask for wisdom and discernment—the ability to be decisive, reasonable, and perceptive. These gifts come directly from the Father. What many fail to understand though is that these gifts go hand in hand with the concept of judgment.

One of the most misquoted lines in scripture is “judge not.” Not only is this taken out of context, but used today as a method to avoid open discernment. In effect, it has led to hypocritical behavior—the ability to avoid personal criticism, while, in the same breath, flaunting critical views based on personal preference. Because of this act, the very scripture being highlighted is broken.

The scriptures make it plain that we should not be judging according to that which we are not being judged for. Why so, you ask? This is because it is our very judgments which will be judged upon ourselves—we are held accountable to the same discernments we advocate.

There is a higher standard involved—once we remove the standard (attempt to hide ourselves in indecisiveness and ignorance) we fail in being intuitive and observant to the very issues which rely upon it. We open the flood gates of ambiguity in order to avoid discovery of our own misdeeds.

For many years, this person has been involved in a plethora of various discussions. With each discussion, though, there must be a clarified reasoning—a sincere growth. Today, this form of interaction has led to the catering of personal prejudices over the defense and revealing of truth.

This is why this particular activity is not heavily relied on as it has been before, for it has given a false sense of security.

None of us stood when the foundations of the world were laid. Given this, it is foolish to completely stand on finite views—viewpoints, like moods, can come and go as they are built upon (or completely desecrated).

We cannot faithfully council others if we are being unfaithful in our own inner council. This is why we must remove the beams first—that is, the elephants in our rooms. Doing so allows us to not only hold ourselves accountable to the righteousness we outwardly depict, yet also the consciences of those around us.

By faithfully doing this task, we will find an inner peace within.

Peace (shalom), as spoken in scripture, represents completeness, or wholeness. This peace is not the acceptance of mixed thinking or the withholding of active discernment—such paths only lead to despair.

Being complete requires a clean house—not the acceptance of obvious messes. We must never be afraid of the broom which sweeps out injustice when it is notably seen. This act should not initially happen from without, yet from within.

Wisdom and discernment can be granted to us—although its judgments must first be displayed and accepted upon our very souls.

Hopefully this understanding will reach beyond these words.

The Will to Work

7/19/2018

It is amazing how often we do not fully appreciate the abundant gifts we have been given. How difficult it is to think of the endless charities which have been ignored—especially those placed upon a silver platter.

Yet when we earnestly invest ourselves in our awarded talents—putting in the necessary hard work, sweat, and toil to perform them—it appears to carry us much further than mere handouts received. The gifts are then appreciated, being utilized in good faith.

Psalms 90 makes this quite clear. “Let your work appear unto your servants, and your glory unto their children,” asks the psalmist to the Father. “Establish the work of our hands.” It is a wonderful passage, reminding us that our hands are made to work—for it is work which allows “the beauty of Yah our Father” to come upon us.

The Father’s spirit loves to work—in fact, it is out of this love that the world was created. Even today, he is constantly working inside his children, moving us, keeping us directed and in focus. It is in him we find every gifted moment is, indeed, precious and sacred.

To waste our time for vain things is a great depreciation of our worldly visit. “Teach us to number our days,” the Psalms passage reminds us, “that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.”

Life is a gift. With that said, let us also realize that our lives have been paid for by others. It took work to bring you in this world—the planning of your birth, for example, as well as the price paid to raise you. Certain people—some we may never be fully aware of—took the time and effort to provide us a better life. They have also paid with tears, pain, and blood.

How so much more the Father has given to bring life to us! The Father has taken great care to create a being in his image—he breathed life into our very nostrils.

Even when those of us have fallen in ignorance from his blessing, the Messiah has given his life so that a chosen people can be free. Work was done for us to live in holiness.

The original Star Wars movies also show us how persistence and hard work were needed to actively rebel against an evil empire. Even when outnumbered, the will to overcome hardship (by displaying personal sacrifice) swayed the tide from the clutches of the demonic Emperor. Many soldiers gave their lives for what was right—they took initiative to act by humbling themselves for a greater cause.

We see a similar type of action in scripture (read the books of Joshua and Nehemiah). We also read of the ancient forefathers and prophets who hear the calling from the Father (rather similar to Luke Skywalker in many respects). It is this calling which drives them forward in faith to the Promised Land.

As the saying goes, evil things come about when good people do nothing.

For those who hear the Father's calling, please take this moment to see that your life is not worth wasting. The fruits, indeed, are worth harvesting.

Get Ready for the Trials

7/27/2018

In Star Wars, it was crucial for initiates to pass what was known as the Jedi Trials. These series of tests displayed one's reaction towards isolation, fear, betrayal, forgiveness, and many other important attributes.

Take note the word 'Trials' refers to more than just one trial. This is very important—for it depicts a series of acts which stretch over critical moments in time. We should also note these trials were not only to be completed, yet to be passed with certainty. The mere act of participating in a trial proves nothing more than a willing eagerness.

These reasons alone demonstrate how the Trials were essential prior to any consideration of knighthood.

In the scriptures, we find a very similar concept. We learn how Moses, for example, was tried in the wilderness many years prior to his calling back to Egypt. Yahshua (Jesus) himself was also tempted in the wilderness prior to his mission.

We read of others (like Abraham, David, and Gideon) who passed various trials prior to fulfilling their roles.

Today, we often hear of people claiming to follow a path of honor and virtue. This act, in itself, is not wrong—yet if, in return, we do not hear of the passing of their trials. This should raise a giant red flag. There are many in certain communities, for instance, which do not inspect the rigorousness their leaders had to endure. Because of this, a spirit of meekness is not found in them—only a hard stiffness.

It is this reaction which has encouraged this message to continue forward.

There is a great responsibility when it comes to inspection. The teaching moment doesn't stop with a completed task—it needs to continue in our fruits.

This requires more than just acknowledgement. It requires an active passing.

The Father has made it known that there are trials coming. Get ready for it—for it is the trial which teaches us who we are (as well as who we are not). Its primary responsibility is to challenge us, observing our reaction at certain times of decision and duress.

What fruit will come out of it? Will it find us worthy?

We are finding out.

Do You See All of these Stars in the Heavens?

7/31/2018

Recently woke up from a very powerful dream a couple of hours ago. It was incredible. There was actually a prior scene (which sort of preludes the final scene), yet will not make it known here.

In this dream, was walking outside in a very rural place at night. There was a panorama of all these bright stars, moons, and galaxies. They were so vast—it was as if they were two-dimensional widescreen shots that were fitted into the curvature of space.

While watching these objects, all of the lights began to fade in darkness—and then faded back to light. It went dark and then it went light again. It kept doing this. It was like a siren, or beacon.

When viewing this event, all the sudden heard this loud, thunderous voice: “Do you see all these stars in the heavens?” Instantly knew the voice was from the Father—not just because it thundered, yet it brought remembrance of what was said to Abraham in Genesis 15:5.

As a side note, when the Father said ‘stars’, was made aware in the dream that he wasn’t necessary referencing stars as we see stars today—he was referring to all luminous objects in the heavens. This realization has led me to relook this concept in the scriptures.

Then the Father spoke the following: “I am giving...” He trailed off.

At this same time this person asked, “Are you giving them...?”

[Now, when looking back, realized that my first name means “Yah has given.” In a sense, the dream was assigning a specific purpose.]

All the sudden, after the following was said, the night sky darkened. Celestial objects began to fall from the heavens.

Three spherical moon crater-type planets fell towards earth around my location. Although they were different sizes, they fell in sequential order—one right after the other towards a single point on earth. The eyes turned away just as the first one was about to hit. The earth swallowed the great impact. The earth was restless—it was as if a vibrational rumbling was occurring.

Had already turned around and started to run at great speed as this mighty scene ensued.

Suddenly, the ground lifted up into the heavens—the impacted had created a huge wave (it was very similar to the first ripple of water after one throws a large object into it). The wave was so great. Although was still running away with great speed, the wave moved so fast as if it was a tidal wave of water. It was stories and stories tall.

As it came near, this person cried out with a great voice: “YAHHHHHHH!!!!!!!” The voice echoed upon the earth.

For those not aware yet, Yah is the name of the Father in heaven.

When the cry was given, jumped straight high into the heavens—this happened right when the wave was going to take over this being. Amazingly, the jump went incredibly high that it went over the entire first wave (the wave actually went past as the jump went straight up).

While falling back down to earth, saw the wave rippling further and further away, destroying everything in its path.

The earth below was on fire, volcano-like. It became a great furnace—the flames engulfed yet did not feel any pain. The scene was exactly like the scripture of Daniel 3:23, although was not bound.

After this scene, suddenly woke up from the dream.

There is plenty of symbolism in this dream. It has unlocked certain doors of what was spoken in the scriptures, such as what is written in Matthew 24:29-31 and Revelation 6:13-14. Both speak about the fig tree in relation to the stars falling from heaven.

The fig tree is a representation of a great nation. The moons which fell into the earth represent a righteous judgement. It was very similar to the stone which smote the image in Daniel 2:34.

This person has been inclined to share this dream here. For those of you affected by it—do reflect and consider it closely.

Following the Will

8/6/2018

Going to share with you another connection between the scriptures and Star Wars—that being of the Will.

This is not just any will, such as personal willpower or the will of expression—this is of a greater will. It is the will of a higher, expressed form.

Star Wars hints of this will, yet as the story has progressed (and changed hands) it has transformed into something entirely different. It now merely acts as a false counterfeit to the real thing.

This begs the question—what is the real thing? And why is it important to follow this will in your life?

We do not have to look far to find it spoken clearly in the script.

“Trust in Yah with all your heart, leaning not unto your own understanding. In all your ways, acknowledge him—and he shall direct your paths” (Proverbs 3).

Today, certain people seek the Father’s will in their life. They speak of Father’s will in this or that action or thing—yet, at the same time, they fail in following the simple things he has made plain.

The Father sees many who cry “for length of days, and long life, and peace,” yet are quick to forget his laws and commands. It is a simple matter. In short, we complicate his directions in order to not follow it plainly. This complication leads to dissociation.

By comparison, the original will expressed in Star Wars has also gone a very similar direction—it is no wonder why many have dissociated themselves from the story.

In the movie Star Wars: A New Hope, when Obi-Wan Kenobi trains Luke Skywalker, we learn of a will which is explained in simplicity. Kenobi spoke of a will which not only control actions, yet also obeys commands.

These commands, though, were only followed when the will was strong from within. On the other hand, those who were weak minded could not resist its directive.

Today, many call such communication as mediation—this is done in order to keep the connection impersonal.

Ironically, this impersonality is quite similar to the idols of stone the Father rejects. In Deuteronomy, for instance, the Father makes it quite clear to destroy the altars, cut down the groves, and burn the graven images with fire.

The danger in these objects is how they aim to take you away from the true will—not the wills of outer stone, yet the higher will that is meant to be practiced from within.

In Ezekiel, it says of the chosen which have been cleansed from their idols: “a new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you—I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh and will give you a heart of flesh.”

This is why it is so important to be in prayer and fasting at this time. With prayer and fasting, there is an important relationship involved. The connection is personal, organic, and real.

On the other hand, when we disassociate from this relationship, we lose the true spiritual form the Father’s will is meant to manifest.

In Star Wars: The Phantom Menace, we see Qui-Gon Jinn intentionally defying the Jedi Council. This council has become a group of leaders steeped in politically and religiously-correct thinking, a noxious toxic which slowly affects their ability to respond effectively.

Because of this, Qui-Gon intentionally defies them in order to follow the will. In fact, it is this very will that not only leads him to find Anakin Skywalker, yet also shapes the life journey of Obi-Wan Kenobi.

Yet instead of midichlorian counts, or biological symbionts (as presented in the movie), a living household of faith is the result of the true practice. We see this clearly in the scriptures.

As Yahshua answered the disciples, “If you have faith, and not doubt, it shall be done. Whatsoever you shall ask in prayer, believing,” he says, “you shall receive.”

It is also no coincidence we learn from Star Wars about the Guardians and Journals of the Whills. This idea has also taken a secular grasp of a spiritual concept.

This, though, is not the time to follow the Force’s will. This is the time for the righteous to follow the Father’s will—for he is our only hope.

“For I know the thoughts that I think toward you,” says Yah, “thoughts of peace, and not evil—to give you an expected end. Then shall you call upon me and shall go and pray unto me—and I will hearken unto you” (Jeremiah 29).

“You will seek me and find me when you have searched for me with all your heart.”

Attack of the Clones

A vast band of troops have infiltrated the camps.

Deployed for swift response, they come in various forms—such as the Scout Trooper, Death Trooper, and the Shock Trooper—each deployed with a particular tactic. Although specialized, they serve together as a galactic garrison.

It is through intimidation they enforce the will of another order.

They are similar in appearance, rather large in number—yet their overall aim is weak. Their blasters, clumsy and randomized, fail to consistently hit the elegant targets. Although their helmets cover their visage, they are necessary to keep in constant communication with their integrated comlink. Their armor is a molded, hard material. Under the armor, a black glove covers the innermost part of their being.

They march onward in a drone like state, living within a facade of armored suits. They appear faceless. They walk in legions, annihilating all within their path.

They can trace their blood from the prototype of a mercenary hunter. In fact, it is rumored that they stem from a Jedi with noble intentions—although their contract was eventually stolen by Darth Lords. They originate from cloners, and, in early drafts, were to wield lightsabres.

Today, they train under imperial academies, bred from birth to fight all resistance without hesitation.

We are not to underestimate these soldiers—for their main objective is to not only build an imperial legion, yet a political-religious system which fully takes over the known regions.

Their leader is a great adversary.

Spiritually speaking, these Stormtroopers stand among us today. Their tongue is as a sporadic, fickle blaster (as they do not possess the true flame). We outwardly see their mask of forced persuasion. They are of a cold hardness. An aura of bitterness covers them.

Although built like a war machine and portrayed as droned robots, they are, as the rest of us, mere mortals. Beyond the mask is a living being—an actual person with a meaningful name. We can uncover those names by removing the comlinked helmets— yet the few of us left needs to start standing our ground.

The Empire has gained enough. Will the Jedi rise to ricochet back their laser bolts... or will we let the First Order build yet another Death Star?

It is a simple matter.

The Great Silence

8/22/2018

We live in a world full of communicative tools. Before us lies a plethora of various topics of discussion—all shared within posts, calls, E-mails, and chats.

The use of these tools has dramatically increased in recent days. Today, we can quickly learn what everyone else is thinking—simply by participating in these interactive messaging services. It has its usefulness yet also its dangers.

Although the chatter is boisterous and the banter is unceasing, there is a deafening silence which is growing by each passing day. It is a silence not based on opinionated ideology, mindless ranting, or accumulation of the latest hearsay—it is something far more deep and substantial.

It again reminds this person of the opaqueness persistent within the Jedi Council prior to (and during) the Clone Wars. During this moment in Star Wars history, there was plenty of interaction among senators and federations—including various entertainments, such as pod race gambling and bar drinking. Yet, when a sincere message was given (such as what came from Queen Amidala or Qui-Gon Jinn), they were quickly thwarted.

Representatives of the Galaxy were quickly conditioned to give thunderous applause to an ever-growing Empire—all while being blinded to the cancerous spreading of sinister darkness.

In the scriptures, it speaks of such a sinister silence. In the book of Jeremiah, for example, the Father says this to a complacent generation: “To whom shall I speak and give warning that they may hear? Behold, their ear is uncircumcised and they cannot harken. The words unto them are a reproach—they have no delight in it.”

“They have healed also the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying ‘Peace, peace’ where there is no peace.”

“They refused to hearken and pulled away the shoulder,” says the prophet Zachariah, “stopping their ears that they would not hear. Yes, they have made their hearts as an adamant stone—lest they should hear the law and words sent in his spirit.”

Today, amongst the endless chatter, there is an ever-growing silence—it is currently being fueled by vain pleasure, selfish stubbornness, and the mighty refusal of a sound sense. The vast baskets of seeds we have scattered have fallen upon shallow soil and stony ground.

As spoken about in Matthew 13, many have fallen among thorns which have sprung up and choked them. There is a lack of deepness in the earth.

As with the wicked generations spoken about in scripture (as well as those depicted in the Clone Wars of Star Wars), our society have become a people that cannot produce our own kind—not only physically, yet spiritually.

Will our society continue to applaud as did the senate? Will it steep itself in vain matters as the council?

“Who has ears to hear—let them hear.”

It Begins with a Message

8/28/2018

It is much more than a trade dispute or a federation boycott.

Although many have attempted to jam transmissions, summoning destroyers to come-a-blazing with shielded generators, the relaying of this important message still remains most prominent.

No, the negotiations never took place. There is a droid army fully armed for attack—in fact, they are already upon the planet's surface.

This is an urgent matter. It is a message being given at a most desperate hour. Desperate to reach the old hermits beyond the Dune Sea, it reminisces of an earlier age of valor—a time when Knights served the Father. Now he begs you to help him in the struggle against the Empire.

It is regrettable to not be able to present the Father's request to you in person. This message, though, is vital to the destruction of the Death Star—for it has noted a particular weakness within the battle station.

Let us be reminded that the Death Star has a false message of its own—one quick to crush a military target with a powerful, swift stroke. This is why this message must be delivered safely. My Father, in turn, will know how to retrieve it—he is not getting too old for this sort of thing.

Although many have rejected him, the Father still speaks today. He continually speaks to us, telling us of his Will. We may hear the sound of a thousand terrible things heading this way, yet there is no need to panic.

When you learn to quiet your mind you will hear him speak to you. Just keep it in the here and now where it belongs—he will handle the rest.

Remember, your focus determines your reality. Stay close to him and you will be safe. Remain focused, concentrating on his living spirit—you will be protected. Just stay on that course.

These words should sound familiar to those who watch Star Wars. They are being given to show you how this message has always existed. Many simply are not paying attention, putting more emphasis on the children's story instead of its matured interpretation.

Let us be reminded of the first Star Wars crawl—as a holographic message gliding through space, it is hastily given to manifest a Jedi rendezvous. The words, of itself, are hopefully given, showing us that no matter how tainted, twisted, or perverted the galaxy may be, the greater calling will prevail.

It was never about religion. It was never about philosophy, or ideology.

In short, it is not about 'ism'—it is about him.

It is about listening, understanding—hearing and doing. It is a matter of discipline, a living obedience. It is also greater than the vast amounts of bullocks we place upon our altars.

The Father is asking us to die to ourselves—to confront the dark father within and put our selfish ways upon the funeral pyre. He is testing us—just as he did with Abraham and Isaac.

As the Knights of old, will we hold his sword steadily? Will we keep our head bowed?

Will we listen to his call?

The Social Club

9/1/2018

As you have repeatedly witnessed, Jedihood is a message not afraid to be controversial or intolerant towards repetitive abuses which are occurring.

As in Yahshua's time, this is a time to speak out concerning blind guides leading the blind. We have had plenty of religions, philosophies, and ideologies—there are many wolves in sheep's clothing who say they practice virtues of integrity, honor, and responsibility... yet have repeatedly shown their selfish, arrogant ways.

Times, though, have changed. Certain groups have had it easy for years—now they are faced with a criticism which cannot be ignored. Star Wars is not the prized cow it once was—some are now facing a hand which is writing upon their inner wall.

Even still, many remain too occupied in their clubbing to heed the signs of the times.

Less people are coming to these groups. They have lost the youth—a generation is about to pass by them. Yet the hardening of the heart remains, just as Pharaoh. This is all for a greater purpose—for we have seen plenty of these towers erected. It is now time for these altars to be torn down from within us, allowing the return to an obedient and humble heart.

As the prophet Samuel declared to a king who quick to fly upon the spoil: “Has the Father much delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices than obeying the voice of the Father? Behold! To obey is better than sacrifice, to harken than the fat of rams—for to rebel against him is as witchcraft. The stubbornness seen is as iniquity and idolatry.”

Although many have raised great platforms to promote their personal pride, their actions are reflecting in a manner they have not foreseen.

They dance unaware in a spiritual social club. This club packed with people living the night life, spinning the disco ball and observing the latest picturesque events. A pecking order is in place, alongside a weighted point system to supply a large handout for gold stars. Outside are intimating-type bodyguards—they herd the latest flock on a bright red carpet. They are also quick to toss those who do not have the appropriate identification.

Some might find benefit from such activity. It keeps them occupied and busy—just enough to forget the authority soon coming to close up shop.

It is two in the morning, you see—yet the drinks are still being served.

It sickens the Father to hear people who call themselves Knights, yet serve themselves, seeking their own flickering lights. It is sickening and repulsive. To serve is to obey, to listen to the instructions without complaint or thought of reward.

“Hear counsel and receive instruction,” it says in Proverbs, “that you will be wise in the latter end—for there are many devices in a man’s heart. Nevertheless, the counsel of the Father shall stand.”

Do not partake with those who promote vain ways—those who strip themselves to make a quick buck, entertaining a vulgar crowd. They will lead you to a fantasy world that does not exist. By morning, you will be spewing in the toilet.

Get ready for the hangover.

Telling the Odds

9/6/2018

Have we been programmed to doubt?

When confronting Star Destroyers and asteroid fields, the possibilities of successfully navigating such fill many with dread and despair. This happens because the world teaches that life is a game of chance—an existence factored by mere probability.

In fact, many look to Fortuna as their majordomo. They give him charge to their inner household. By doing so, they fail to see that his primary existence is to serve the vile gangster—basing their lives to statistical outcomes alone.

Mind tricks are easily brought upon such gambles.

The scriptures warn us of this spirit. Just as the serpent caused Eve to doubt in the garden, the Adversary still attempts to draw us from the way of life. The Knowledge of Good and Evil will always present itself in a false aura of wisdom—it will lead its pursuer towards foolishness.

Still, many keep biting the fruit. The odds might appear to be in their favor—yet, as the bets keep persisting, eventually the house will win.

When it comes to the chosen, let it be known that this is a time for faith. It is time for an honest, sincere reaction—one which knows the destined path remains ahead. We must step forward and walk towards the greater purpose—not focusing on the paths conditioned for defeat, yet the one path created to withstand.

“Take unto you the whole armor of Yah,” said Paul to the Ephesians, “so that you will be able to withstand in the evil day—and having done all, to stand.”

Although suggestions for failure may come—stand strong. Persevere towards what is right and good.

Know that life is not some random event. A higher will remains.

Preparedness

9/12/2018

It is fascinating how many beloved stories speak about a destined individual (or a small group of individuals) who survive various challenges, sacrificing themselves for a greater cause. Although we see heroes falter at times, they are consistently able to survive a multitude of hurdles, teaching us the importance of perseverance and growth.

Star Wars is such a story.

Luke Skywalker, for instance, is a young man thrust into greatness. As he flew inside the trenches of the Death Star, his focus remained on a higher calling greater than himself. All those years of flying the T-16 Skyhopper through Beggar's Canyon paid off in an important act he didn't hesitate to perform.

And yet, when the task was fulfilled, an even greater calling pursued.

The reason why we can relate with such heroes is because they represent the performance of our own fulfillment. Instead of giving into despair, their ability to act faithfully shows us what it means to live.

This doesn't come overnight, however. It requires preparation.

Life is, in essence, about performing an act. Not only does it take commitment and practice, yet also a willingness to perform when the appointed time comes about.

Will we take the time to go over the script we have been given, listening to the director when he cues us—or will we be caught sleeping when the curtains are surprisingly opened?

One of the most telling parables Yahshua gave was about the wise and foolish virgins. Although both groups awaited the bridegroom's arrival, only the wise were prepared by putting extra oil in their lamps, keeping their wicks in check. They were the ones who entered the marriage ceremony.

The foolish, though, were not known.

Think about it. How many of us would accept a loved one who did not show up to the marriage ceremony on time? Would we accept the excuse "the garment was not ready" or "was asleep and did not feel like going"?

Could we relate with the response, "Do I really know you?"

One can dream of doing daring feats... yet if the person is not preparing oneself to act faithfully when the moment arises, they are very much wasting their time. This is not only waste for the individual—it is the case for all parties involved.

Darth Sidious

There was a time, long ago, when the called out ones were sound—they required discipline, patience, servitude, a defending of the weak and promotion of justice. They were able to practice self-sacrifice, humility, and honesty.

Yet these individuals eventually stumbled away from the path of guardianship, forgetting the requirement of giving oneself over to a greater will.

Soon afterwards, people behind them started to create a religious order from these virtues, becoming blind to their own procedures. They gave in to mindless ritual, meditating for days on end without seeing beyond a shroud of darkness which surrounded their being. An evil subtleness began to grow with each passing day—their greatest teachers had no way of comprehending it.

It was Sidious who had come into their camps.

Darth Sidious is a real Darth Lord of the Sith—he truly exists today. He hides himself as Senator Palpatine, a politician who loves the palette (the taste buds) to manipulate people into building an Imperial Order.

This tasting seems pleasing to take in at first. It is palatable—quite pleasing to the tongue. Yet once digested, it leads to an inner corruption.

It is the forbidden fruit.

George Lucas was very familiar with this character. In fact, he spoke about him in THX-1138 under the name of SEN. SEN was a person who looked eagerly for a new roommate—he used whatever means necessary to bring upon this selfish result.

He failed to leave the oppressive, robotic city—for he is a representation of fallen man, one who cannot break away from man's corrupted system.

Note the words Sidious, Senator, and SEN. It is very much based on a word found in scripture—what many refer to as sin.

Many have twisted the meaning of sin in order to hide themselves from it. Yet, with all the manipulation, it has a rather simple definition.

In the scriptures, it speaks of sin as leaven. Leaven is an additive which, when put into dough while being kneaded, rises up in full force during the baking process. It represents an inner corruption of the self, an additive that is very subtle at first—once it gives rise to the fermentation within one's spirit, it can be impossible to let go unless given the antidote.

In the Torah, there is a known feast called Unleavened Bread. It is a time which leaven is supposed to be removed from all items of food and placed outside of the camp. This is to teach us the importance of removing sin from our lives.

The reason why we avoid the concept of sin is because many do not like to point out this manipulation within themselves (let alone others pointing it out for them).

We must come to terms that all of us have taken hold of the forbidden fruit at one point in our lives—it has given us a loss of our innocence. If we are to properly defend the innocent, it is this leavened bread which must be denied.

Yahshua spoke of the living bread, the manna which rains down from heaven. This is the bread we are to partake in. By eating it, we die of ourselves, understanding that our ways have been corrupted by the Adversary.

Many people had a hard time with his teaching and left him at that hour. It was a test of their discernment.

Darth Sidious is a result of a fallen order—it is an order which has allowed procedure and ritual to dictate instead of selflessness, sincerity, and faith. It is Sidious which allows the Empire to rise within us, molding us into a pawn of darkness instead of a servant of the light. By denying ourselves of the pleasures of the world, we are denying his manipulation of our lives.

Do not live by this bread alone—live by every word which proceeds from the mouth of the Father (Deuteronomy). When you have done this, know that you have passed a great challenge.

This is Why We Fail

9/19/2018

Our eyes can deceive us. Still, many of us trust them. Then, when the voice says to “let go,” we hesitate, pressing onward with our targeting computers.

Eventually, things go wrong. We then complain that the Master is the fool—in truth, it is our own blindness which has made us the more foolish.

We ignorantly look to ourselves instead of the higher will which exists around us. Hand postures and noble intentions will not magically lift out our ships from the swamps of despair. We choose not to believe.

And that is why we fail. It is because our lack of faith is found disturbing.

Faith, as a grain of mustard seed, can remove the mountains that confront our path. Yet this requires action, a sincere prayer and fasting of the soul. As noted by James in the gospels, “faith without works is dead.” Yet just because we have been committed to a great, laborious work does not mean we have executed ourselves in a faithful manner.

Will we finish what we began? It is a matter of will—a will higher than our own selves. Until we seek the path of destiny, we will not be able to successfully confront the Dark Father, the devil, let alone sinister Palpatine (palatable sin) which oversees him—for it is the Father’s will which gives us true confidence.

As the Jedi in Star Wars, one by one the righteous have slowly gone extinct, hunted down and destroyed by evil agents. There was a time (long ago) when there were guardians of peace and justice. This, though, was before the dark times.

Can these spiritual defenders exist again? They can and they will.

Attachment

Human beings commonly look towards the mere physical for insight. Such placeholders may point to a spiritual truth, yet does not necessarily produce truth by itself.

This is why we must be careful to fully invest ourselves in such items—the scriptures warn is about this. Although some may find happiness in temporary things, eventually its overall sustenance will wane. Reality is much more than what we carnally observe with our flesh.

In the Star Wars Prequels, the Jedi were purged due to this ever growing focus. Their pursuit towards maintaining a visible influence clouded their judgment—it prevented them from discerning a deep, spiritual depravity within their own ranks.

The rise of the Separatists, for instance, may have been generated by crafty Sith Lords—yet it would have never gained momentum if not for the corruption the Jedi failed to distinguish. Although the Jedi had taught their Padawans to avoid personal attachment, for instance, they failed to see their own conformity to a degrading system—a system which promoted a deadly idleness towards social conformity.

As was criticized by Yahshua of the Pharisees, the unhealthy practice of vain ritual should never dictate our overall task to perform—doing so allows our spiritual households to become an adulterated marketplace.

We will now revisit a few of the common Jedi terms. Let us go deeper into their meanings to find how misplaced investment in the physical can weaken our spiritual state—just as it did during prior to the Jedi purge.

The Jedi Temple

As with the fallen Jedi, most people today focus way too much on a physical temple or church building instead of the sanctity of those within it. In truth, it is the body and mind which is to become a temple for the spirit of holiness—they must be kept sanctified and upright. Most treat their facilities as a dumpster, walking towards tendencies which defile the soul—not preserving it. It should be treated as a consecrated space. It must be fervently guarded from evil attacks.

The Jedi Order

Many of us are too busy fabricating unproven orders instead of obeying the original ones we were innately given. These directives have been around for thousands of years for a reason—prosperous generations have lived on proclaiming their influence. Obedience to the order is a key component in fulfilling it—we should never expect people to follow with us if we are not following the commands spiritually ordained for us to perform. Our inability to listen to the Master teaches those around us to do likewise, ignorantly progressing backwards according to our own flawed instructions.

The Jedi Code, Creed, Maxims, Tenants, etc.

Accurately reciting a statement of divine belief does not come anywhere close to the successful, ongoing performance of its full interpretation. The same can be said with the scriptures itself—we can muse all we want about its application, yet if it is not being daily performed in the actions of those who preach it, then it is a waste of everyone's time. Remember—we are judged by the very standards we hold towards other people. Line memorization does not at all equate with the true living and knowing of its concept.

Keep in mind these are just a few explained examples. There are others.

We must be careful to never allow visual appearance to act as the primary substitute for faith. Some may stress the importance of removing ignorance through knowledge, for example, yet if they are conveniently ignoring truths by hiding certain whereabouts—which is the greatest indicator?

In short, our world has become too attached towards external devices which do not feed us spiritually—these objects have plagued more than they have helped. The more society turns to them for guidance, the easier it is for them to be swayed towards their own destruction.

Do You Know?

Now that we are at this point, going to go ahead and re-explain in further detail where the word 'Jedi' comes from and what it means.

Some people have claimed sources such as Japanese Theatre (jidaigeki) or an ancient order of the Egyptians (djedi), yet the word stems from an entirely different origin. In fact, these cultures learned of this word from a much earlier source.

The reason you may never have heard about the following truth (prior to this message) is because many do not pay close attention to a most precious resource—a revealing guidebook called the script. The scriptures have shed light on this word many times. This is yet a moment for its further revealing.

The incredible thing about this is you can still find the word clearly placed within the English biblical text, especially when it comes to two distinct names. The first one is found in 2nd Samuel—it is this book we learn of the name Jedidiah. We see the Jedidiah name yet again 2nd Kings. The second name is found in 1st Chronicles, in which the word is frequently mentioned—Jediael.

Yah and El, as noted at the end of both names, are direct references to the Father. These references are still present in common names today—names such as Elijah, Isaiah, Michael, and Daniel. Grasping this truth unlocks a door to further understanding the Jedi reference, especially when realizing the names refer to a specific act the Father is currently displaying.

The meaning of the word Jedi can be learned within the 2nd Samuel reference. In the book, it says “she bore a son and he called his name Solomon—and Yah loved him. He was sent by the hand of Nathan the prophet, calling his name Jedidiah, because of Yah.”

The first sentence should automatically clue you in to the meaning of Jedidiah, that being “Yah loved.”

Jedidiah is, at times, translated as “beloved by Yah” or “friend of Yah.” This beloved friendship, though, is a very particular form of intimacy—it is a relationship which goes beyond that of human interaction.

What is this relationship? One of the first hints we have of it is when Yah speaks to Solomon in a dream, mentioned early on in 1st Kings. We know this is the case because, just prior to the dream, the book says “And Solomon loved Yah.” This is a critical reference in the story.

In this dream, Solomon asks “Give your servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad.”

This quote should automatically take you back to the exact words that were given earlier in this message. You may have also wondered, “Why does this person keep mentioning the concept of judgment?” There is a very important reason for this.

With this said, let us now take a good look at the key points to this request. First of all, note that the relationship is based on servanthood—this is essential towards grasping the meaning of the Jedi word. Secondly, note again the phrase “an understanding heart to judge,” as well as “discern between good and bad.” This should bring to mind some key passages shared regarding in the Garden of Eden, as well as certain words spoken about by Yahshua the Messiah.

Some of you might also remember a certain question Luke Skywalker gives to Yoda, in which he asks, “How am I to know the good side from the bad?”

Yoda responds, “You will know—when you are calm, at peace. Passive.”

It is not a coincidence that the name Solomon refers to the Hebrew word “shalom,” which means ‘peace’. This is not an ordinary peace—it is one which brings about a deep, inner calmness. It is the clarity of mind, the passive response of a humble acceptance and allowance—not to men, yet to the Father.

It also represents a specific form of servitude.

It is good to note that the word Knight means ‘servant’ in the Germanic Language. To become a Jedi Knight is to become a Humble Servant—not just a Peaceful Listener, yet an Intimate Knower.

Solomon, in his dream, is asking for an intimate knowing (‘you will know’). This knowing is naturally expressed in a specific form of spiritual wisdom.

As this message mentioned prior, the evidence of this gift carries onto the next part of the story, in which Solomon makes his famous judgment between two mothers who fight over a baby child. He announces that he will split the baby in two—the natural response of the true mother is then revealed.

Later on, the script says “And Yah gave wisdom and understanding exceeding much, and largeness of heart.”

Let us now look closer at the actual Jedi word and connect further meaning.

If you look up the root meaning of Jedi in Hebrew, you will learn that it means ‘to know.’ A similar connection is also made with the name Yoda, which means ‘to be wise.’

Is it no wonder that the Jedi are Knights who serve the greater will, while Yoda presents wisdom when he speaks, discerning between the Light and the Dark?

If the Jedihood message has been calling to you, you will eventually be shown that the Jedi word is specifically action (or verb) based. It is indeed an act of a specific, spiritual intimacy which is scattered throughout the scriptures—it is simply hidden due to English translation and lack of spiritual insight.

Not only is this word found in the stories of the Garden of Eden, Noah, Moses, and the rest of the Torah, yet also in the Prophets, Psalms, and the Gospels.

It was not expected for this person to find this truth in the scriptures—it happened as it happened. In fact, it happened when this person had completely removed the false understanding of Jedi. By fully letting go, the truth was instantly revealed.

When the Father asked to share this wisdom, realized it would challenge many people. It is a hard thing.

So it remains a challenge—a flaming sword (a lightsaber, a rod) which separates those who do know from those who do not.

Impersonal

10/2/2018

One of the greatest disconnections held by people today is the lack of deep, spiritual relationship. Due to the confinements of our current social construct, relations between people are quite shallow, generalized, overly self-absorbed, and extremely opinionated. These relations have also been built to retain a blanket of tolerable acceptance.

Important affairs are postponed due to a confusion of non-discerning minds, minds which cannot differentiate between a basic concept of right and wrong.

We live in a very indecisive world.

This vain activity simply brews a series of emotional, untamed onslaughts towards various forms of confrontational matters. Many fail to adapt to a matured audience because of their extremely weak inability to relate.

It is no wonder why the current concept of the Force is so embraced by certain people today. It has become an impersonal, non-judgmental deity—an excuse to remain hold of theoretical stances without being tested in the fires of thorough examination.

The concept has excused many behaviors instead of challenging them.

On the other hand, it is in the scriptures we learn of a personal creator. We learn of a Father which holds us accountable towards our actions—one who provides strong council to those willing to follow the ways of life.

This, though, requires a daily sacrifice—a deep commitment which provides true reconciliation for our past failures. In turn, we are joined to a great spiritual family—one that is not only orderly, yet relatable.

We must not look up to the gods of stone which excuse these ongoing perversions. The worship of such an object will only further pervert society, bringing it closer towards the pits of oblivion.

This is a moment in time to make a clear distinction—instead of putting everything together in various flavorful packages, are we able to get past the dark cloud of shallowness and get back to what matters most?

Are we willing to do what is right instead of remaining complacent in our own vain opinions?

The Path of Uncle Owen

Today, this person has been reminded of Owen Lars and his moisture farm.

The character represents those who manage their harvests while not heeding the growing signals of the Empire's reign. Many have had their memory banks erased—they do not hold onto the Father's ideals anymore. They are also convinced that the Imperial legions will leave them alone as long as they stick to their own thing.

It is very easy for them to find reasons not to get involved. Besides, they have too much work to do.

"Don't pay attention to that crazy old man," he says. "You were told to forget it. That will be the end of it—it belongs to us now. Your only concern is to prepare those droids."

Some of you reading this have heard the voice of Uncle Owen. He speaks often to those who settle in deserts instead of looking for good soil.

Owen does indeed care. He is merely working the way he knows how—he attempts to teach his hired hands of the harvesting craft. While it is a noble pursuit, he fully ignores the destined path fast approaching, keeping a stubborn stranglehold to his very unstable farm.

On the other hand, Old Ben (the older son) waits patiently, knowing the time has eventually come. Will they heed his calling?

Ben Kenobi's actions remind us of the days of Yahannan (commonly known as John the Baptist). He was a voice which cried out in the wilderness, pleading with the people of Israel to make their paths straight. When confronted by the Pharisees of his day, Yahannan said the following: "Bring forth fruits met for repentance. Think not to say within yourselves, 'we have Abraham as our father,' for Yah is able to take these stones to rise up children unto Abraham."

"The axe is laid unto the root of the trees. Every tree which brings not forth good fruit is cut down and cast into the fire."

Just as Old Ben kept a watchful eye over Luke Skywalker, and as Yahannan waited for the Son of Man (Yahshua), we must also look faithfully for the Father's presence today. The flaming sword is being ignited before us—even if Owen does not allow it.

And yes, there is something we can do about it—right now.

The Vineyard

10/15/2018

A spiritual brother spoke sincerely some days ago, mentioning a concern in which Jedihood has been clinging a bit much on Star Wars as of late. After reading some scripture, he asked for this message to focus more on the scriptural message as was originally given. This touched me greatly.

Although there is nothing wrong with presenting Star Wars metaphors, if you have come to this point you may be ready to sink into hardier meat.

The conversation also helped me see that some are earnestly asking questions, waiting to see what is beyond the metaphorical veil. In the scriptures, it is commonly referenced as parable—a story in which deep spiritual truths are presented in everyday language (otherwise known as the common tongue). This is done to help the current culture relate with its overall meaning.

Most people are not aware that scripture is the Father way to present wholesome guidance to his children. The problem is people strictly look at the words through an informational or historical lens. This is not to say the script does not have these truths (far from it)—yet its real purpose is to show us the way home.

This is why many have a hard time discerning what is actually being written. In fact, the words can seem quite foreign to some.

When reading the scriptures, this person relates to it more as a treasure map, a legend, or as a spiritual roadmap/journal—once you see it in this light it will open many doors.

Jedihood exists to help relate the Father's words within a language and dialect people can understand. This, in short, is the real substance behind the speaking of tongues.

While there is still a great hesitancy out there for this message, there are also a few here and there sincerely asking for interpretations. These interpretations, though, can only be given to those who are ready to receive it.

It appears we are nearing this time.

To reiterate this, going to provide the following story (along with its interpretation):

In the beginning portions of the book of Isaiah, it speaks about a vineyard which had brought forth wild grapes. Although this vineyard was well cared for, built with a tower and winepress, it had not provided its harvest in due season.

“What more could have been done to my vineyard,” asks the Father, “that I have not done in it?”

Keep in mind that Isaiah was speaking to a people who are agriculturally minded—grapes were harvested commonly in Israel by the time of the fall harvest.

Because of the vineyards lack the fruit it was built to produce, the Father places his judgement upon the vineyard. He vows to take away its hedge and break down its walls. It is to lay waste—to bear forth briers and thorns, declaring that it not be pruned or dug. He also commands the clouds to give no rain.

After Isaiah gives this parable, he then reveals its true spiritual significance.

The Father had created a place for his people—yet when he looked for justice, he beheld oppression. “Therefore my people are gone into captivity because they have no knowledge. Their honorable men are famished—their multitude dried up in thirst.”

Today, the same story can be given.

Years ago, when younger, a vineyard was planted. In its beginning it was well cared for, pruned, and watered. It was given a tower to guard its doors. A winepress was provided to execute justice.

Yet, as its defenders and maintainers left, it was given to the hands of foolish gardeners. Within its walls are wild grapes. Although appearing as clean and pure, these grapes have been tasted prior to their harvest—they are found bitter. They have no solid, upright trunk.

“Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil, putting darkness for light and light for darkness—bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter!”

Is it time for the few of us remaining to be gardeners again, “uprooting the poisonous growth” as my brother put it?

If so, it must begin within the wildness of the soul.

Focus on the Spirit

10/16/2018

Man years ago now, there was a time this person was quite focused on creating orders, protocols, and things of that nature—had produced many writings and teachings while initiating in a great deal of structural conversation.

The scriptures remind me of the frailty of these early activities.

When Solomon finished building the temple, for instance, it had to be properly dedicated for the Spirit to enter within its doors. Eventually, due to a falling away of the people, the Spirit eventually left—it led to the disorder and captivity of the nation.

Today, there are many who focus on building towers—it is very easy to get caught up in such things as people are very active in it. Yet what about the spirit that lies within such construct? What are these monuments being dedicated towards?

These are important questions.

We must remember that Israel once put together a calf molten with gold, dedicating it in place of Yah and his appointed feast. “These are your gods Israel,” they said, “which have brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.” They went according to the traditions learned from a foreign land rather than heeding the instructions at the mountain. They were impatient—wanting to do things the way they thought was best.

Yet the Spirit did not come down to bless them. In fact, quite the opposite happened.

We must look at the spirit within people. Although their temples may be decked with gold and fine apparel, do not be deceived—what matters is the true heart of the soul. A vast layering of fine morality will not save them in judgment.

Be aware. When you see a group that has turned to actions of vanity, ignorance, foolishness, and pride (and being very adamant towards excusing such behavior), it is best to leave them entirely—otherwise you will suffer under their curse. Although they may look as a lamb, they can easily speak as a dragon.

Those who focus on the true Spirit represent the true dedication—they will find their temple full of light.

It is rare today to see such a congregation. Please inform if you find one.

The Wine Press

10/26/2018

Being in a weakened state, the Father recently presented a dream to share knowledge of a confrontation which had been unleashed—a spirit whose name was Gath.

Did not know what the word meant—so, when cornering this spirit, called him Goliath (which he consented). In fact, his influence was shown to be the reason for the heavy tiredness that was being received.

When awakening from the dream, this person looked up the name and learned that Gath is a city referenced in the scriptures. In fact, Goliath (the one who confronted David, a champion of the Philistines) originated from this very city. This became a major confirmation to the dream's spiritual significance.

The word Gath, in Hebrew, means 'wine press'. The word is also visually similar to the English word 'gather', or 'gathering'.

It is no coincidence that a wine press was mentioned recently in the previous message called The Vineyard—for it referenced a prophecy of a vineyard written in Isaiah.

A wine press is an instrument which helps harvesters trodden ripened grapes into juice. This action is performed when the grapes are gathered during the end of harvesting. The wine press is heavily referred to in scriptures, representing an act of judgment.

Do remember the Gath spirit in the dream being very angry, yet frustrated—he had followed this person with a heated fervor, yet it from a distance (without confrontation). In other words, he was as a hunter which could not faithfully hunt.

The Father revealed that this spirit represents the fallen orders of certain Jedi-type groups. They are quite bitter—they do not know how to respond to this message and what has happened because of it. They are a gathering which appear as Goliath, yet are not able to counter as with confrontations in the past. In short, they are as a distraught wine press.

In the dream, had to walk backwards to corner the spirit (as he walked behind me) so that a conversation could present itself.

Honestly, do not know if there is strength to do such a thing at this time. Yet, given that the dream happened, will be open to it.

Very hesitant to share this, yet here it is.

Non-Religious

10/31/2018

Have been lead to present some words regarding an assessment people have been making regarding religion. This has to do with an assumption that religion equates with faith.

Although faith is found in religion, religion is not at all a primal ingredient of faith—this is testified by a deep, spiritual depravity within a vast number of religious organizations today.

When reading the scriptures, found that the translated word for ‘church’ had been greatly exaggerated from its intended meaning. In the original language, a better translation would be ‘a solemn assembly’, or, better yet, ‘a gathering of called-out ones’. Its meaning is not dependently tied to a physical building or organizational construct.

It should not then surprise us that the church system today is so easily accessible by those outside of traditional faiths—this act is simply pointing out the true origin of the word.

The origin for the word ‘church’ comes from the word ‘kirk’, which comes from the word ‘kirke’, or ‘circe’. Circe is where you get the word ‘circus’, a direct reference to the pagan goddess Circe.

Many have no idea what gods (and their sorcery) they actually condone. This is because they have been hidden within socially accepted beliefs.

One of these gods, for instance, is the goddess known as Libertas, or the Babylonian prostitute Semiramis. She is directly associated to a particular concept you might recognize. The scriptures also speak of a particular type of alchemist sorcery known as Pharmakeia, represented by the Caduceus—we do not have to look far to see how this word has evolved.

There is a very important reason why the scriptures teach us not to look towards the gods of stone. Keep in mind that these truths are not solely given in the past for a distant land—the words are speaking to us today.

Many today have turned towards dogmatic theology and humanist belief systems. These practices may present an aura of faithful living, yet can easily provide a doorway towards an amalgamation of accepted vices.

If we are to live righteously, we must turn away from sources which promote spiritual prostitution—for faithfulness is about loyalty. It is about commitment towards a deeper calling, quite similar to a marriage contract.

It is not about what we tell others. It is about how our lives are being expressed.

Indecisiveness

Know the following will offend some people—yet am going to share the following as sensibly as possible.

As you should know by now, the Jedihood message does not exist to please people with tasteful delicacies. It is a sobering message, dedicated to providing sustenance to those who truly need it.

Was hearing an audio interview recently, in which someone essentially said they did not believe in those who are judgmental. Have heard this type of belief for years (as am sure others have).

There is a great fear out there of those who make mindful decisions—the reason for this is because they may point out the dirt which is caked upon our human walls.

Although many pray for healing, many have been socially trained to ignore this very disease which brings about their sores. This disease is, essentially, spiritual. Today, many blindly accept their blemishes, wearing it as a token of pride—while those who act wisely are shunned within the minds of unbelievers.

This act, in essence, affects one's ability to thrive and grow. Just like physical diseases, spiritual disease will leech a person to the point they remain in constant sickness. It ultimately leads one to blindness.

Realize that with great healing comes great decisiveness—for it is all about confronting the root of the issue instead of pretending its non-existence.

As explained before, we have heard often the quote, “Judge not that you be not judged,” especially from those who do not read the scriptures. If one looks at the Messiah's complete teaching, you will find the quote is further explained in a loose parable—a parable which reveals that we should remove the beam first from our own eye before removing the splinter from our brother's eye.

This is not to say to ignore both the beam and the splinter, or that the splinter is insignificant (a splinter in the mind's eye can be detrimental as well as the beam). His words are simply revealing to us that we should remove both in a particular order.

In essence, the story reminds us to be aware of our faults and taking care of them first—this avoids hypocrisy.

Yahshua was not indecisive when speaking the truth. He was fully able to judge the practices of the Pharisees and Sadducees, as well as cities such as Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum. “It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for you.”

Keep in mind this is the same man who said of Jerusalem's temple, “There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down.” We can then fast forward to the events of 70 AD, when the army of Rome sacked and burnt the barren temple to the ground.

Yahshua was a man of conviction—not a promoter of social acceptance. In fact, it is through his conviction that many faithful ones were healed by his miracles.

This is because he understood that physical ailment is directly related with spiritual—he did not tolerate sin from those who could see their implications, yet was very understanding to those who were spiritual babes.

The book of Matthew, mind you, is making the case for a holy, reigning king—and, as king, he must show a higher wisdom.

Our society has foolishly rewarded those who practice a form of foolishness. Because the foolish are taught not to discern, they are not able to faithfully judge others (let alone themselves). This allows free reign of various forms of perversion.

In truth, this is the price people are willing to pay for personal liberty. The Father's kingdom, though, is definitely worth the cost.

With this said, let remember that wisdom is the successful application of knowledge—when we practice indecisiveness, we are promoting the ways of ignorance and foolishness.

Lighted Words

This person is very thankful to those who support this message.

Know that this work is totally copyright-free. It is a free gift to those who are positivity touched by these words. Also, if these words have resonated with you, you are free to post and share as called to do so. You are also welcome to break down these words for easier digestion, or elaborate if needed. You have the blessing to do this.

Those who purposely misuse these words though will have the curse, so be wary. As with any fire that burns—please use responsibly. These words may be published in works, yet it is not to be amalgamated with messages which go against its teachings. It is also not to be solely profited from.

You should have noticed by now that the word “I” is avoided. This is done to bring about a humble state of mind, as well as to highlight essential truth without focusing on this human clay. This is not done to hide yet to surrender to the calling. Also, by not using this particular word, it lifts up the other words, allowing them to become more relatable to the listener.

Prior to this message, many writings have been given in the past. We will start revisiting these writings within a mature light—this is so people can glance deeper as to what was spoken about.

Given the many teachers who cater to itching ears, this person will present these writings, as with the totality of this message, in a sobering-like manner. These are serious matters which need proper attention.

There are going to be those who will not like what is said here—that is okay, given that this message is to challenge people out of their comfort zones to see the truth that has been ignored. The path of knighthood (servant behavior) requires a very serious mind for training. For those who are deeply touched by these words, know that this message is talking to you. It is a challenge to live the life of consistent virtue.

Given the lack of seriousness seen with various groups, am very distraught with the social club mentality as it has promoted weak-minded behavior. The sword work seen is extremely clumsy and easily parried—many wield their tools improperly to play as a child in make believe. There is a time for practice, yes, yet it is meant to eventually be displayed in the real world.

These words shared are to provide a submissive strength, in order to reveal a greater strength. It will go against ideologies and belief systems.

Now that you have read this, you are free to continue. We will now look to greater meat.

“Come—let us go up to the mountain of Yah and he will teach us his ways.”

The Responsibility of Submission

11/8/2018

The following is based on words given on a website many years ago.

Today's circumstance has brought remembrance of a great responsibility—it is a responsibility not spoken much today and is often ignored in public. In fact, many of us fail to understand the importance of such a task.

What is this responsibility? It is a letting go of what one assumes they know to the true source who actually knows.

Many have a very hard time grasping this, so will further explain.

As mentioned in other instances, the word Jedi comes from an ancient word which means To Know. This knowing is relational and requires an act of faith, a submission to the higher will.

It is the ability to submit which shows us that we, alone, are powerless. It is this powerlessness which brings forth the greater power—that it is the Father who provides for our needs.

The inability to submit shows not only defiance, yet ignorance as to what the practice actually represents. This is why this submission is more important than building human friendships, or trusting in a personal will to successfully venture out in our world.

Learning to accept the Father's truth above one's own standing allows the gateway of understanding to flourish—yet when we close ourselves with selfish pomp, the gate abruptly closes. We then lose sight of the Master, the compass which show us the way home.

In fact, the moment we fail to recognize the source as our strength is the very moment we begin to falter in our direction. The failure to bend, in essence, brings forth a breaking.

True resolution comes to those who humble themselves – for it is the realization that we, alone, cannot bring resolution. Only the Father's spirit can accomplish this—for he is able to destroy the ignorance and doubts we hold tightly.

Let us submit ourselves daily by performing the tasks the Teacher ultimately requires.

Fasting

11/14/2018

Fasting is a very important act, yet is seldom realized in its overall fulfillment.

This is partially because many restrict its meaning to a direct association of food and drink. When looking closer, we find the word centers primarily on restraint. We should also note its spiritual application, not just its physical.

Abstaining from certain activities can help refocus energy towards more important matters. It serves as a protection from evil, healthily promoting a deeper vigilance. It also provides attentiveness towards practices which may lead us astray, however innocent they outwardly appear. In fact, proper fasting not only increases discernment, yet brings revelation to hidden frailties that might otherwise go unnoticed.

When Yahshua went to fast in the wilderness for forty days and nights, the restraint wasn't focused on just the carnal. We are looking at a much broader fasting—one which denied human interaction, social activities, employment, and other activities. He allowed himself to be examined by the Adversary, a tempter who spoke to him when he was at his weakest point.

Yahshua learned how the Father's words were far more important than his appetite for sustenance, power, and riches. It was the overcoming of these temptations which proved his readiness for the calling.

One of the main reasons why many cannot hear the calling is because of too much noise! When there is a heavy bombardment of the senses, the spirit can become engulfed with all sorts of concerns. By fasting, the overflow is targeted, allowing the senses to return towards their natural use.

As with prayer, we should always fast in humility. Mere appearance is not enough to faithfully try our hearts. The point of this trial, you see, is to challenge our true character. It is to test our meekness and reliance towards the greater will.

Just as the Jedi in Star Wars had to pass the trials prior to knighthood, so we must also be willing to be tried in the fire. As the Father says in the book of Isaiah, “Behold, I have refined you—but not with silver. I have chosen you in the furnace of affliction.”

“Is not this the fast that I have chosen—to lose the bands of wickedness, to undo heavy burdens, to let the oppressed go free, and to break every yoke?”

Lukewarm

The word 'lukewarm', found in the book of Revelation, has planted itself within this flesh these last few days. It has served as a reminder of what it means to live a righteous life.

We see many today who have positioned themselves in a lifestyle that cannot live righteously. Because of their openness to vices, an aura of darkness keeps beckoning them another direction—they feel powerless to defend themselves, continuously swaying from the true path. This has led them to confusion and double mindedness.

The book of James states that “a double minded man is unstable in all his ways,” while Paul reminds Timothy not to be “double-tongued.”

It brings to mind a picture of a serpent whose tongue is forked in two directions, representing the paths of both good and evil. As the serpent in the garden, many have attempted to balance their good deeds with their bad—they do not realize how the leaven of evil, when kneaded within our spirit, affects the whole lump.

Am also reminded of the parable Yahshua gave concerning the sower in the field, mainly the part of the seeds being sown among thorns. “Such as they that hear the word, yet the cares of this world, the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things, enter in to choke the word and becomes unfruitful.”

Our society has become unfruitful spiritually—as well as biologically, financially, and other means—simply because its roots cannot let go of the tares. Its stubbornness to attach onto vain pleasures has given rise to a plaguing curse.

“Because you are lukewarm,” says the Father, “neither being cold or hot, I will spew you out of my mouth.”

The Father's spirit is of a single tongue. He wants us to be decisive, not confused between two opinions. Elijah's prophetic warning made it clear in his day—yet we have complicated a very simple matter! We have allowed complication to act as an excuse to merge away from the true path.

Know that all ways which stray from truth lead to deception. If we continue to venture off by ourselves, allowing worldly cares to carry us towards unfruitfulness, we have no one to blame but ourselves.

This is why it is so important to hear the Father's voice and do what he says. Allow him to show you the way home.

The Battle is Not Yours

11/23/2018

It is uncommon for this clay to speak out regarding specific instances in life, especially given that Jedihood is a message which goes beyond personal experience. Yet through prayer, fasting, and meditative thought in his words, the Father has again revealed a deep cut within my spirit—a wound from many years ago.

It is based on a cruel injustice. A deep wrong that has not been made right.

Yet before going forward again in faith with lightsaber in hand, this person must challenge the spirit and question its true motivation. Even though it is based on righteous living, is it the true catalyst for these actions? Is there an incentive primarily involved—one which desires attention, power, or financial success?

Is there an animalistic instinct still hidden within the man?

These are questions every true believer must ask—for the path is easily strayed. When going off to war, are we honestly placing the Father's ways ahead of our own—or do we seek to fight for our own self-glory?

Although there may be injustices to address, we must not take personal vengeance against our oppressors. Let it be based on righteous judgment—for we must not forget that we have an intercessor which fights for us.

We must allow the Father to fight the battle.

Today, hear the words of Jahaziel to king Jehospat speak when looking upon the enemy's camp: "Be not afraid or dismayed by reason of this great multitude—for the battle is not yours, but Elohim's. You shall not need to fight in this battle! Set yourselves, stand still, and see the salvation of Yah with you."

“Fear not, nor be dismayed. Tomorrow, go out against them. For Yah will be with you.”

Although we fight with sabers of light, it is our reliance to the Father in heaven which grants true victory. Allow him to guide your actions and trust in his ultimate will—for he knows all and sees all.

Are you willing to bend to him? Are you willing to reveal your wounds so that they are healed?

Let us remember the courage of David when confronting Goliath, the Philistine of Gath. As he declared so many years ago, “let all of this assembly know that the Father saves not with sword and spear. For the battle is his.”

He will give our enemies unto our hands.

Trust and Relationship

11/27/18

This person was going to present an entirely different subject, yet the Father preferred something else to be brought up at this time. It is regarding an important matter.

Given that this person has almost completed a certain task, the Father has been asking for a certain form of patience. An arrangement is being made for a certain time and place.

It has been difficult, yet he is keeping me occupied along the way. Am reminded of a child who is strapped to a seat in a vehicle, in which the parent is driving a long distance to a particular location.

The Father has been really testing some of us—not necessarily to see how much we can perform, yet how dedicated we are to perform in the way he specifically asks.

When the cue comes, are we prepared to give out the right lines? Are we going to trust him and faithfully accept his direction?

Trust and relationship is a very important part of this message—in fact, it is what helps define it. It is about a great communication, a dialogue which goes beyond the senses of traditional man.

Many in the past have attempted to patent and sell it, trying to fit it into a specified box—yet it is an organic, living experience. It must be lived to be understood.

There are so many people out there who do not know how to live. A little here and a little there, they gamble with their lives, automating themselves in vain directions. They do not see the danger that lies ahead.

We cannot hide in our hobbies. We cannot hide in religion, politics, or the gossip of the day. We cannot hide our nakedness in these things.

We must be clothed by the true spirit of holiness, standing on the rock of true principle. It is this covering that will save us.

Breakdown

12/2/18

Earlier today, was reminded of how unstable the spirit of mankind has become.

Although have heard many speak of how progressively better our society is becoming, this person knows deep down we have slowly progressed to a very troubled state. Even when the structure boasts of its latest improvements, it still continues to lack discernment of its own degradation.

Advancement remains more essential to its followers than the destination. This is deeply troubling.

Just as the representatives of Star wars galaxy were quick to promote an evil empire from a mismanaged republic, so we are in danger of heading the same direction—and just as the Jedi failed to discern prophecy, the same thing is occurring with our spiritual leaders.

Remember the words Yahshua gave when he spoke to the Pharisees and Sadducees of his day: “Hypocrites—you can discern the face of the sky, yet can you not discern the signs of the times?”

They could not foresee the prophecies unfolding before them—their man-made doctrines had blinded their eyes.

The signs for this day have been made clear. This is the time to get our houses in order— for the breakdown happening today represents a breaking down of our own households.

Our reaction, though, must begin within our own selves—as well as our families.

If there is a situation which has hardened your heart, now is the time to rectify it—the Father will help reveal and solve these issues. Yet you must come to him earnestly.

This scolding will only continue until we are willing to listen. We have been warned.

Tasteless

12/11/18

It is time to speak about a subject others would not dare to discuss. The freedom to speak the truth (without fear of excommunication) allows such ability.

In fact, the last few years has shown how complacent many of these religious groups have become, remaining impervious to the many telling signs occurring before us.

Many want to believe their perverted manna will keep adequately feeding them. Yet, as seen in Exodus, the lack of harkening will only breed worms.

And, my, does it smell.

Have seen many speak about an enlightened path. The best way to test if their words are true, though, is to note what fruit comes out of the teachings. If it is good fruit—one which shows good actions, rightful living, and healthy wisdom—then it might be time to listen. Yet, if it is bad fruit—it is best to walk away from it entirely. That tree will eventually be cut down and cast into the fire.

Let us remember the words given by the Messiah. If the eye becomes a stumbling block (which has for many out there), then it should be plucked out—it is better to see the kingdom with limited discernment than to be cast into the fire.

The same can be said of laboring hands.

Don't get me wrong—salt can taste good. Yet if it has lost its flavor, why season your food with it?

Today, we see many writings regarding peace, compassion, and love—there are many wonderful, flowing statements of belief. Yet pay attention to those who live by them—do they improve?

Do they depict selflessness, promote responsibility, and faithfully execute justice?
Do they mature—or do they remain stagnant?

Test the words in key situations, especially in times of stress and scrutiny—how do they respond when ruffled? How is their attitude when things go wrong? Do they rise up in stature, or are they quick to stab from behind?

Do they hold a chip on their shoulder? Do they respect those before them, or do they snicker? Do they pay it forward when it comes their turn—or do they still cater to the ways of a spoiled child?

These things will teach you more than mere words will.

It reminds this person of a religious bookstore—a store full of best sellers speaking about self-empowerment and prosperity, promoting forgiveness without obligation.

Don't get me wrong, love investing in scriptural material. Yet most of what is out there is garbage.

The hard truth is many of these authors would be quick to ban a scriptural book (such as Leviticus) to further promote their own misguided theories. In short, many preach the ways of grace and favor—yet fail to inspect their own flavor.

The same could be said of other religions, including the Jedi cults today.

You see, years ago, before hearing the name Jediism, it was widely known as cultism. In fact, remember the established ones before warning, “Be careful—you don't want this to become a cult.”

That was never the paved intention—yet the same could be said of a hellish road.

Worthiness is not based on what people think or believe—we have plenty of thoughts and beliefs out there. Let us always keep in mind of the one who is judging the performance.

Instead of misplaced admiration, stay focused on what matters most. Ask yourself—“Is it worthy of the food it flavors?”

The Journey

12/11/18

There is nothing new under the sun. For every myth that is presented, there is an original prototype associated with it.

The same could be said of the Jedi Knight. Although portrayed and vastly distorted by today's fiction, the connection remains to the ancient way of living as depicted in scripture.

In fact, this ancient practice is slowly coming back to our remembrance.

Some may wonder why the word 'knight' is directly tied with the Jedi. This is because Jedi represents a particular form of knighthood, or what is known as servanthood. Prior to an honorary title given by monarchs, it was a specific, conductive performance—it is this performance which stem from the ancient Aharonic and Nazirite vows.

Nazir, for instance, means consecrated, separated, holy, and called out. This requires an abstaining of certain activities in order to maintain a strong relationship to the Father. This act allows one to spiritually intercede, providing guardianship to the land of promise.

The stories of Samuel, Samson, and Gideon, and others are prime examples of this practice.

They are the faithful and righteous peacemakers as described by Yahshua—the salt and light of the world. Is it of no coincidence that Yahshua is also known as the Nazarene?

Given this revealing, it is no fluke that the Jedi Knights were originally described as the guardians of peace and justice—for they represent the meditators between the higher will and the people.

Although similar to what is described in Star Wars, the will (or Whills) in fiction have an entirely different representation than what is depicted in scripture. In Star Wars, the will is falsely represented by the Force—a bipolar energy field which is two-sided, otherwise depicted as the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil.

In scripture, it is the Father who is the higher will, the true source of life (the Tree of Life). The fruit of this tree is of a relational understanding—it is one between the Father and humanity.

Given this truth, we should not confuse it with the self-obtained gnosis which brings about the curse—this is exactly the fruit which the corrupted tree brought forth.

The path being spoken about in this message is not necessary a path of self-discovery—it is the path towards rediscovery. There is a difference—that difference is based on what is being sought after.

The question we must ask is this—are we seeking knowledge for ourselves, or are we seeking the truth which lies beyond ourselves?

One could spend a lifetime attempting to describe the path in every detail—yet if it is not walked, acted upon, experienced, and lived, then it is not known.

To know of something is not merely about gathering facts or information (this is the mind of an apprentice).

To know is relational. To know is to be one with.

This journey is about action that is ongoing. It is a daily performance—the path of knowing the Father.

Let us not walk away.

Let us listen to what the Father said through the words of Jeremiah: “Stand you in the ways, see and ask for the old paths (wherein is the good way) and walk therein—and you shall find rest for your souls.”

Will we seek the good way?

The Shepherd (Part 1 of 3)

12/23/18

It is time for some deeper sustenance.

The following may shock some of you—yet the time has come to know that the visual and functional aspects of the Jedi are based on the nomad/pastoral shepherds, especially as they are depicted in scripture. This depiction is primarily seen within the Obi-Wan Kenobi character, though it was expanded upon with Yoda and, eventually, the Jedi in the Prequels.

This realization came some years ago and was spoken about in the Jedihood video series. Will go ahead and expound further upon this subject.

The truth is those who relate with the Jedi could very well have an innate connection to an ancient nomad ancestry, an ancestry connecting to events occurring around a land bridge known as Israel.

Israel is a land has been a gateway to other continents such as Europe, Africa, and the greater Middle East for thousands of years, and was greatly utilized during times of trade and war. Over time, these ancient people spread throughout the world and has greatly influenced our faith and prosperity (you can learn about this throughout a vast array of historical texts).

The Jedi are basically a fictional representation of these ancient peoples—especially the priestly tribes. As seen in the movies, they are discovered at a young age and are gathered together due to their strong connection of the greater will. They are then trained to oversee matters of moral judgment in society—although they do not rule over the people as a king or dictator.

We clearly see this practice through activities of the ancient prophets, for instance, as found in the book of Judges and Chronicles.

On the other hand, the fallen Jedi in Star Wars (which also includes the Sith Lords) represents false shepherds. These shepherds use their abilities to fleece the flock for their own personal gain.

It reminds me of the words of Ezekiel 34, in which the Father declares: “Woe to the shepherds of Israel that feed their own selves! Should not the shepherds feed the flocks?”

In fact, it was this declaration in Ezekiel which presented a challenge of giving the Jedihood message (as it is seen today).

In Star Wars, what we are consistently seeing is an ancient feud between shepherds—they are fighting over the flocks of the galaxy.

The same thing is occurring in our world right now—there is a war between moral principle and sound judgment with the ways of sinister pride and selfish behaviors. This battle has led many to transgress from the ways of righteousness, bringing our world closer into chaos and societal anarchy.

How is this war of principalities being fought? To answer this, we will look closer at the shepherd’s function and what they harnesses.

The primary tool or weapon of a shepherd is the staff, or rod. It serves two purposes: One is to gather and keep the flock together, while the other is to protect the flock from external threats.

In Star Wars, the lightsaber basically represents this practice—its function is not only to maintain civility for the galaxy, yet to defend it from the forces of evil. This is also seen in scripture as the flaming sword, the sword of the spirit, the morning star, as well as the Father’s word.

Just as a sheep recognizes the shepherd’s voice, it is the Father’s word which calls out to protect his chosen ones.

Besides Ezekiel, references to shepherds are found throughout scripture—look up, for example, Isaiah 40 and Jeremiah 23. Yahshua also refers himself as the Good Shepherd time and time again throughout the gospels.

Once you discern this connection, you can't avoid seeing it—you either accept it or ignore it all together. Keep in mind though that, by ignoring this, one is breaking the very compass the Jedi are called to uphold—there is no ignorance.

Yet this is what many communities have decided to do. In so doing, they are essentially removing their own mantle.

We will go over mantles and further connections between the Jedi and shepherds in the next part of this message.

The Shepherd (Part 2 of 3)

12/29/18

We will now continue this message to further explore connections between the Jedi and the shepherds of ancient times, specifically those spoken about in scripture.

In the previous portion, we went over the primary tool of the ancient shepherds—this being the staff, or rod. As for this portion, we will go over an important visual aspect of the shepherd—what has become known as the cloak, or mantle.

Mantles, in scripture, represent a spiritual covering of authority—a garment which symbolically harnesses a calling of responsibility. This piece of clothing can be passed on from one generation to another, similar to the tool of the staff/rod. This garment also represents the right to judge or make decisions over important matters.

The prophet Elisha, for instance, was able to perform similar feats as Elijah did when presented with Elijah's mantle. Another example is when King Saul laid hold upon the mantle of the prophet Samuel, in which the garment was torn from his grasp—this represented the kingdom of Israel parting from his rule.

Today, it is not uncommon to see monarchs, clergy, judges, and doctors wearing similar type coverings. As far as their specific colors and what they represent, this is explained further in the original video series (<http://www.jedihood.com/series>).

Regarding the brown and beige colors—this is a specific type of authority which was known as being trustworthy, humble, and dependable. It is a conserved, common-sense type anointing which practices a form of abstained servitude, or what many viewed as hermit-type practices. They were to speak truth regardless of worldly criticism (you see this role within many prophets in scripture).

As explained in the first portion of this message, the prototypical visage of the Jedi is first depicted within the character of Obi-Wan Kenobi, otherwise known as Old Ben. The word “Ben” is a Hebrew reference meaning “Son of” and is directly connected to spiritual lineage.

Ezekiel, by comparison, is referred to by the Father as “Son of Man” or “Ben Adam,” the son of the original seed. This reference is further expanded upon in Daniel’s vision and within the words of Yahshua himself.

Obi-Wan, in A New Hope, also gives a statement declaring the Jedi Knights go back a thousand generations. This is a direct reference to Deuteronomy 7, in which Moses states, “Know therefore that Yah is your Elohim, the faithful one who keeps covenant and mercy with those who love him and keep his commandments to a thousand generations.”

This statement again referenced by David in the Psalms and Chronicles: “He has remembered his covenant forever—the word in which he commanded to a thousand generations.”

In Exodus 20, the Father declares that the iniquity of the fathers will fall upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of those who hate him—note how this time period is clearly depicted in the Star Wars movies, initiated by the Jedi purge and the fall of Anakin Skywalker.

It is no coincidence that a curse falls upon Skywalker’s children for quite a few generations within the trilogies—this, in fact, is an ancient principle which has been ingrained in our spirit for thousands of years.

It is also not a coincidence that these words came from a deliverer known as Moses. In fact, the mannerisms of Obi-Wan are quite similar to the depiction of Moses in scripture.

Moses, for example, is exiled and lives as a hermit learning the shepherd’s trade—this exile also happens with Obi-Wan Kenobi, who shepherds the young Luke Skywalker. Also, just as Obi-Wan helps mold the direction of Luke Skywalker, Moses does the same with Joshua (the same word as Yahshua, or “Yah saves,” a deliverer).

Both Moses and Obi-Wan also have a strong association with the desert. There is a reason for this.

Yoda, on the other hand, is essentially Obi-Wan in a higher form. You might have noticed that he and Obi-Wan wear essentially the same—yet look more closely. Note that Yoda holds an actual staff/rod instead of the lightsaber—this should give you yet another confirmation of the relationship between the lightsaber and the rod/staff.

In fact, Yoda’s age of 900 years old is a direct reference to the early fathers in scripture—patriarchs such as Adam, Noah, and Methuselah. Yoda’s name (Yodea/Yada/Yeda in Hebrew) also has a similar meaning to the word Jedi, which means “to be wise.” Wise, indeed, these patriarchs became.

Trees are connected with both the biblical patriarchs and Yoda. How is this so? This is because trees spiritually depict an early ancestral wisdom.

Also note the burning bush in which Yah is revealed to Moses, as well as the two trees in the Garden of Eden—it is not hard to think of particular Star Wars scenes which Yoda reveals the Jedi path in a similar manner.

There is much more than can be said on this topic. For now, we will stop here and continue again in Part 3.

In the next portion, we will be speaking more about the shepherd’s role and how this role has been lost in translation.

The Shepherd (Part 3 of 3)

1/1/19

In the previous two portions, connections were made between the ancient shepherds written in scripture and the fictional Jedi depicted in the original Star Wars movies.

Many other connections can be given, although we will now focus on the responsibilities of these peculiar people. In so doing, we will better understand why the shepherd's role, although vital, has been greatly exaggerated and perverted throughout history—this has led to further ignorance of its true origin.

In the early years of the Internet, remember being part of a forgotten website which gave three important quotes about the Jedi. These quotes have stuck with this person over the years as they have acted as a litmus test going forward.

Will go ahead and share each one with explanation.

The first quote is the following: "One will be enlightened, one will face their destiny... one will see, one will be blinded."

It is important to note the clear separation being made here—that being of true and false guides. This outlook is the same with shepherds and prophets in scripture—some will be spiritually awake, unafraid to reap the signs of the harvest... while others will be spiritually dead, pulled by ritualistic behaviors and opinions of men.

It is essential to know which is which.

Am reminded of the story in Jeremiah 28, in which a true prophet (Jeremiah) is matched with a false prophet (Hananiah). Jeremiah had wanted to give pleasing words, yet was given a sincere message of warning—that of an upcoming destruction. This destruction was based on many abominations witnessed—and, because of his sincere honesty, the Israelite king (along with the priesthood and royal escorts), was greatly displeased and had him imprisoned.

Hananiah, on the other hand, presented a pleasing and popular message to the king, one which allowed the people of Israel to continue in their backsliding ways. As was proved later on, Hananiah had taught rebellion by speaking according to the fleshly desires of men's hearts. In short, he had helped set the fate of the nation's destiny.

As for the website's second quote, the following was given: "You can search for years and years, through mountains and desert, and you will never find it—that is because it is always with you."

When people are lead by a plethora of collective paths which promote gnostic rites and ceremonies, this should be an automatic warning sign. Eternal life is not found in such activities, yet by truth of the Father's word—yet many have forgotten where the true source of life is found. The Father will provide to those who love him.

We can again look to the scriptures for parallels. "The kingdom of Yah cannot come with observation," says Yahshua in the testimony of Luke. "Neither shall they say, 'Here!' nor 'There!'—for, behold, the kingdom of Yah is within you."

And, now, for the third quote: "The Jedi are often regarded as 'Wizards' or 'Mystics' by those who do not have their fantastic powers."

One of the warning signs is seeing individuals mistaking believe the true path is one based on wizardry, witchcraft, or some form of mystical influence. Anyone who claims the path to be such is greatly mistaken and is led by deception—for the basis of magical power is its powerful deception.

In Leviticus 19, the Father says, "Regard not them that have familiar spirits (mediums), neither seek after wizards, to be defiled by them." Although this fruit may look and taste good, there is a strong side effect involved. Do not eat of it.

As far as the fantastic acts found in scripture, this is provided by a set-apart spirit. This is where the word Holy or Ruach (Hebrew) comes from.

This is also why we see the fictional Jedi set themselves apart from certain activities which may promote falsehood and misjudgement. “Once you start down the dark path,” says Yoda, “forever will it dominate your destiny.”

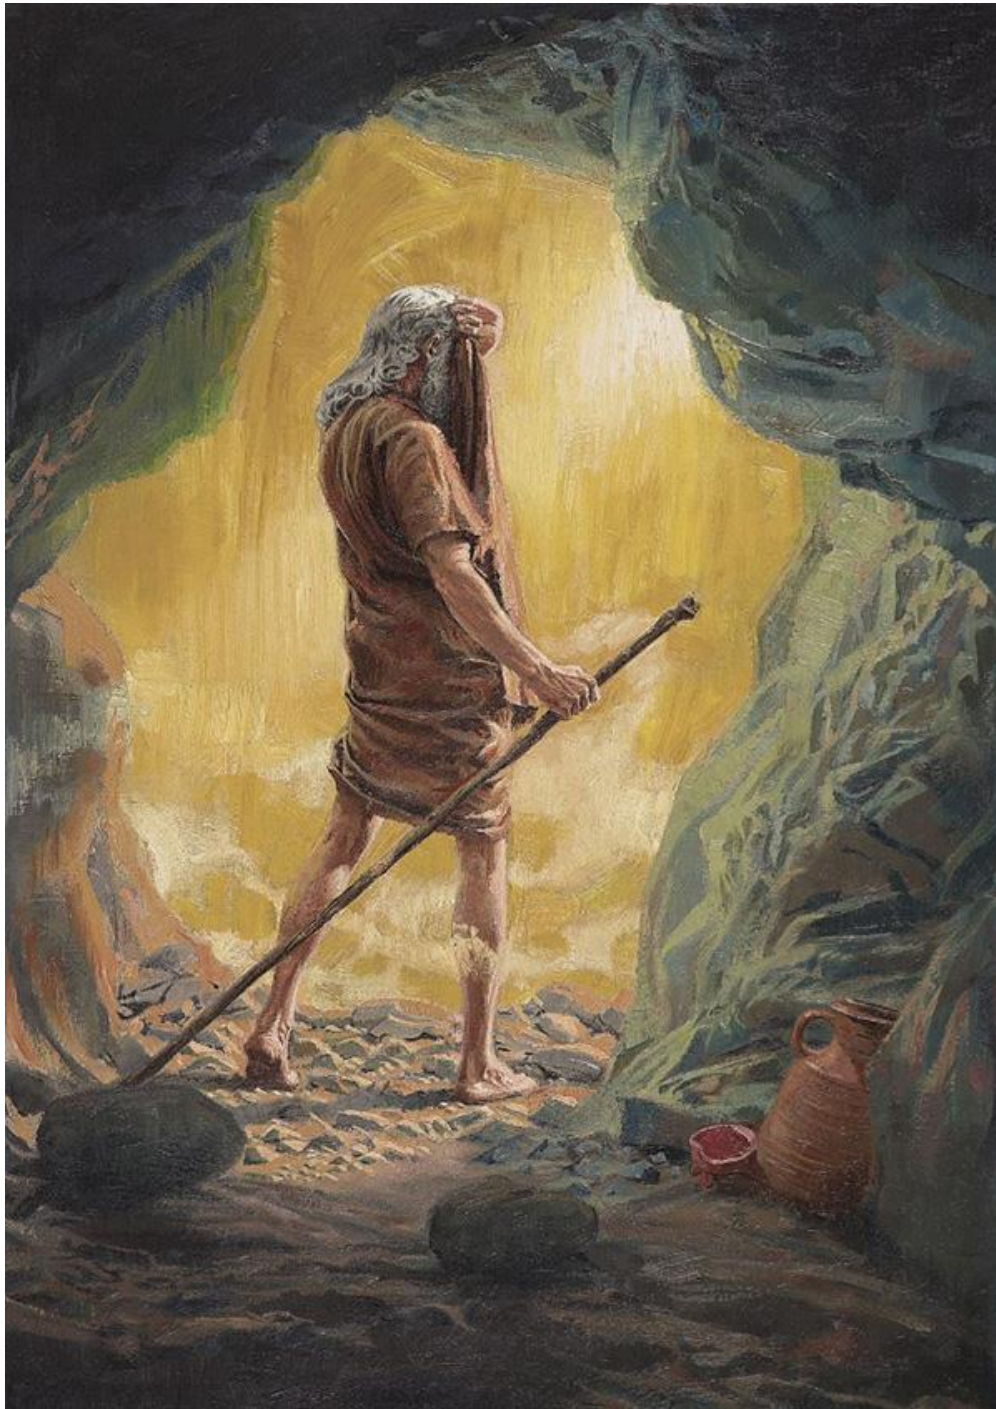

“Consume you, it will.”

By simply giving these three quotes, you can see how many have strayed away from the original path— they are, in a sense, as lost sheep straying from a shepherd, seeking their own paths without counsel. They are the fallen ones.

In the book of Zechariah, it says, “For the idols have spoken vanity, while the diviners have seen a lie and have told false dreams—they comfort in vain. Therefore, they went their way as a flock—they were troubled because there was no shepherd.”

The responsibility of a shepherd is very important. Although translated falsely throughout the generations, this is a time to rediscover the path and “unlearn what has been learned.”

Hope you are blessed by this revealing.

The Spirit of Elijah (Elijah Means 'He Is Yah')

The Jediist Stain

1/7/19

While presenting this message, light was shed into the domineering influence of today's Jediism—it is a blending of political Socialism, New Age Occultism, and Nietzsche-based philosophy.

Its organizational framework remains Darwinian while its corrupt church system borrows heavily from worldly Catholic structures.

This political, religious, and philosophical construct has greatly stained the Jedi concept—so deeply that its practice is hardly recognizable to its actual origination.

A prime example of this revealing is Jediism's evolution towards an 'ubermensch' mentality. This has created fantastical projections of gurus more interested in promoting self-created values than acting as guardians for truth and justice.

The window shopping of various religions (taking the popular aspects while spitting out the rest), along with promoting an aura of humanitarian activity, has promoted a dogmatic, ethnocentric belief—it is a belief which denies vital, spiritual growth.

It has been very troubling to watch. It has emboldened this message in order to bring much needed moderation to a situation left unchecked for many years.

This stain, along with the repugnant movie known as The Last Jedi, were the signs which helped bring this message further out into the public. These sickly influences have passed the point of no return.

They have been tested and found guilty as charged.

In the scriptures, we are shared of such situations and how to respond accordingly. As Gideon and Jonah, those who were called (yet hesitant) to respond, we must come to the realization it is time to confront those who have set their paths towards perdition.

The truth is the Father does care for these people. If anyone can be saved from this carnage, then it is entirely worth the effort.

Going to share a portion of a video that was posted some months ago posted by Left Foot Media. It is left around the 15 minute mark and is to be played for the next three minutes—was impressed to share it here on this page (feel free to watch the entire video if inclined to do so):

The Acquaintance

1/13/19

Desired to speak about two different subjects, yet was lead to present something completely different at this time.

It regards a matter this person doesn't necessary want to speak about—although this message was never about me. If this was the case, never would have returned—would have kept this message within.

This person was led to speak about friendship. This is because most people do not understand what friendship means—they usually get it mixed up with acquaintance.

An acquaintance, for example, is someone who is slightly known, a formal type of intimacy. In other words, it is a relationship based primarily on etiquette.

A friend, on the other hand, is someone who is well known—it is based on a relationship which includes a strong, informal intimacy. With this said, there is even a deeper, connective form of relationship—that being of a brother or sister.

Here is an example. When you meet someone for the first time, you follow a proper speaking arrangement according to the environment and situation you are meeting in. In other words, there are certain rules of etiquette that you follow. As you grow to learn about the individual, you become more lax, willing to share and speak about more sensitive subjects.

In most cases, connections with other people remains limited—given that you may not see eye to eye with that person or have limited your investment towards the overall relationship.

The key understanding here is that our actions towards others are based on the intimacy of the relationship.

In truth, our connection to the Father holds this very same principle. When many go to the Father, their relationships remain limited to the rules of convention. They see him primarily through the visage of tradition and ceremony. They associate his name according to an object, or provide very abstract, generalized name.

This is because there is a limited investment in the relationship—they do not fully see eye to eye with him, having issues with particular rules of etiquette he requires.

In order to enter his house, we must learn the rules of the house.

Take for instance the writings in scripture, particularly those in the Torah. When the people of Israel first came out of Egypt to learn of the Father's ways, he started out by presenting commands they were to follow. This is because the contract between Yah and the Israelites started out as a formal relationship.

Moses, on the other hand, had an informal relationship with the Father—he could speak with the Father in a relaxed, yet respectful manner. Because of this intimacy, he became a worthy intercessor for the people.

You see, the people of Israel didn't know the Father as Moses did. The commandments were simply a doorway towards that knowing.

When the people failed in keeping these basic principles, the relationship became very limited—it would get so bad at times that the people would be driven out of the land.

It reminds me of the words Yahshua written in the book of Matthew: "And then I will declare to them, 'I never knew you—depart from me, you who practice lawlessness.'"

As we have already discovered, the root meaning of Jedi is 'to know.' To know the Father means relationship.

Without relationship, there is no release. There is no intimacy.

As Yoda stated in The Empire Strikes Back, “You will know—when you are calm, at peace. Passive.” Please note this informality.

People may call themselves a Jedi—yet if there is not a complete investment to the relationship, limiting it to a formality, then they are not fulfilling this role. Only those who have fully committed to the relationship can partake of this calling.

“A Jedi must have the deepest commitment,” said Yoda, “the most serious mind.”

That seriousness today has fallen by the wayside.

Do not follow the titles men give themselves—this will only promote their insecurity. Instead, look at what they have reaped—you will know them by their fruit. It is the fruit which shows if they have the intimacy required.

Let me share a visual representation of what is spoken here (note the limitation and testing in the acquaintanceship, and that certain people are called to go beyond it):

House Cleaning

1/23/19

A year has passed. A four-year trial has been completed. A stern warning has been given out in its due season.

A few have listened while others have fallen deep within their slumber. The sleepers though will eventually awake as the weight of Samson pushes against the pillars of complacency. By then, it will be too late for many.

Yet for those who have chosen wisely, a door has been opened—it is this opening brings about a renewed purpose, a purpose which breaks away from the organized madness to reveal a deeper meaning. This message will focus on you now.

Many have been led astray for years, thinking that a person or religion will save us. Many were fed the lie that we could prosper without looking upon our own fears or cleaning up our own dwellings.

Those days are over. It is time to reveal the ugliness that has remained dormant for so long—to tackle issues we conveniently forgot about.

Isn't that what enlightenment is all about—to reveal the dust which coats our bedroom shelves?

Do not be afraid to see this imperfection—for now is the time to tackle the chore. It is time to clean our rooms and prepare for a family arrival. It is time to walk perfectly amongst an imperfect world, to put on the valued garments while discarding the filthy rags—for only the appropriate clothing will be accepted at the marriage feast.

This is a time to prepare—to take a bath in the flowing river. It is time to get cleaned up.

Graven Path

1/30/19

This person has been stalling on a touchy subject the last few days. It was mentioned before in prior videos, yet felt it necessary to explore it further given the current circumstances.

Some years ago, became apparent of something which later on started to bother me—had succeeded in gathering a collection of Star Wars toys and memorabilia. At one point, was asked to move into an upstairs room while the items remained in display downstairs. This transition was hard for me at first, yet as time passed, began to notice a change in discernment.

As a small kid my family was poor. There were things my parents simply couldn't afford. Eventually though, as this person grew and became established, was able to retrace and find these items. The Father blessed my hands and allowed me to have what couldn't be had before—was very grateful.

Yet it was while staying in the upstairs room that a certain peace began to come over me. Particular worries and concerns did not affect me as they once did before. As time passed, the scriptures began to make more sense—could hear the Father's voice louder then ever before.

How was this so?

Eventually found out the Father was planning something. That he was teaching me something very important.

He was showing me how my collection was in danger of transitioning into something else.

Were they actually toys? Or were changing into another form—perhaps a form the scriptures have been warning about all along?

A hard truth had arisen.

The story of Laban, for instance, began to take a whole new meaning—he had certain images which his daughter Rachel had stolen. In fact, he called them gods (read Genesis 31).

Was there a connection?

A figurine, by definition, is a statuette, an image in human form. The Father has warned us not to make graven images to worship them (Exodus 20). This is because he created us in his image, out of his likeness. To put him into a graven image not only lowers his state, yet lowers us into a graven state of mind. It greatly limits our form and function.

We are not meant to live as a mold—yet so many of us live today as such. Many of us live according to the molded bricks and mortar the world promotes on a daily basis—yet what about the living cornerstone of the Almighty?

This will be a real challenge for some of you out there. It's not an easy teaching, yet is important to face in the mirror of inspection. It was this very inspection which eventually led me to put the toys away—helping to bring me to this point of being.

Ask yourself—are you driven by man's graven path? Do you worship its figure?

Let this be something for you to think about.

The Narrow Path

2/7/19

Most of us are taught to view good and evil in terms of polarity. Although there is dichotomy between the two, they do not have equal footing nor are they evenly distributed.

In fact, it is a very lopsided affair.

Years ago, used to picture a contest between two groups enacting a game of tug-of-war. It would go back and forth with one side striving to gain victory over the other. It was as if each faction had the innate ability to gain ground.

In reality, the act is similar to how an owner plays with a pet. The owner has control and can stop the session at any time—the pet, on the other hand, believes that it has the natural ability to overcome its owner. This, though, is only a test of the animal's will.

In the scriptures, we learn how a fallen angel challenged the Father's ways by declaring an alternate arrangement. The Father, in response, met the challenge—he would allow this tainted system to flourish until the fullness of its time had passed. When complete, it would prove (once and for all) which method was best. There would be no doubt to its judgment.

The Father has this all under control. He has merely loosened the rope, yet still holds an all-consuming grip. This is being done to show us, in detail, the wages of transgression.

There are many paths of transgression. Without the light, you will stumble in many directions—it is as if walking without a compass at hand. One is completely lost in one's own foolish will.

Yet the path of righteousness is direct and singular—it is neither perverse nor corruptible.

Think of it as a lightsaber. The true path is narrow and gets brighter as you get closer to the core. All other paths stemming away from the origin lead to darkness. Many fail to see this because they are too busy playing with the toy instead of gleaning from the story it tells.

Given our fleshly nature, we have all gotten lost in the night at one point or another. We all will lose our way when we have solely relied on our limited perspective to do the talking.

The path of redemption is going towards the light. We must watch for the signs that will lead us home.

Will we be vigilant? Will we submit ourselves to the higher arrangement?

If so, we will be blessed.

Individual Fellowship

2/16/19

This person has been focusing on E-mail conversations as of late. Given that the warning period is over, have been focusing more with particular people called to this message.

We will start separating ourselves and walk forward in our calling.

Realize that this message is being given in this fashion for easier digestion. It is specifically for those who have heard about the Jedihood message and know they must learn more about it. If you here this message, the Father is talking to you.

Anyone is free to give there voice, although feedback will be returned in a sincere, yet blunt fashion. Given that the Father has taught this person to act in such a manner (it is a process that has gone for over twenty years now), know how to handle various discussions out in the open.

If this message has been calling you in particular, feel free to contact jedi@jedihood.com and we will go from there. We can keep the message private if needed or expound as we see fit.

Gideon's 300

2/16/19

Some years ago, created a music track called Gideon's 300—the epic story about these brave soldiers has often reminded me of the important contrast between dedication and perception.

Gideon, like most of his peers, was a fearful man who was visited by a messenger from heaven. This messenger, though, saw his true potential—a courageous man who would soon confront the armies of Midian.

Similar to the robbers seen in the movie “The Seven Samurai,” the Midianites acted as locusts, destroying and eating the crops of the Israelites. The Israelites then began to cry out to the Father for deliverance as their land was being raped and pillaged.

Prior to building an army, Gideon was led to tear down his father's idols. This act made many people very upset— for they perceived the Father with certain imagery (note that the name Baal means Lord, which is similar to the old English covering for the Father's name).

Gideon also challenged the false authorities. “If Baal be the true one, let him plead for himself.”

When this act was performed, the Spirit then came upon Gideon to confront the Midianites. Due to the hype of the moment, roughly twenty-two thousand soldiers came over to help fight.

Yet the Father observed what was in their hearts: “There are too many people to fight (lest Israel becomes pompous saying their own works had saved them). Whoever is fearful and afraid, let them depart.”

And so Gideon had half of them leave.

Still, the Father announced to Gideon that there were too many soldiers. And, so, Gideon again was asked to test the people. The second challenge selected only those who were vigilant—only those who were sincerely ready for battle remained.

After this test, only three hundred soldiers were left—this was a far better number in the Father's eyes.

The story goes on to explain how Gideon and the three hundred were lead to defeat the Midianite army (this of itself provides great teaching)—yet what stuck with me is the sifting process the Father asked Gideon to perform. In fact, it is quite similar to how Gideon sifted wheat as a farmer.

When you think of it, 98.6% were told to leave the army. That's close to 99 of 100 people, or one percent.

From learning this, you can perhaps see the many parallels of what is happening today.

Today, we are taught that it is all about numbers—that this is what has influence over people, money, personal capital, or power. Churches, for instance, are quick to look at their tithe funds instead of the Spirit of the Father's word.

Yet what about the chosen people the Father has kept as his own?

In Star Wars movies, for example, not all of the Jedi were chosen. In fact, many of them were not—only those who were able to perform and survive the takeover were called to help cleanse the galaxy. Over time (as depicted within the Prequels), it became easy for many of its faction to act pompous and lazy—to quickly rush towards the latest craze. This eventually brought forth their downfall.

Those who trained at the temple fell for the very same temptations true believers fall for today. Attrition, just as with the Jedi Order, will eventually factor in.

For those who are called—do not worry how the crowd perceives you. What matters is your preparedness for the fight. Are you faithfully executing the will of the Father without question or complaint?

Those who follow him will defeat the armies of despair.

The Meal

2/27/19

There is a time to read ingredients and browse the menu (it is good to make well-informed decisions)—yet there comes a point when one must partake in the meal itself.

There was a time this person listened to many people's beliefs—some beliefs made more sense than others. Eventually, though, began to notice more and more people not living how they speak. Even when someone presented a particular truth, it was provided primarily for personal satisfaction or self-motivated excitement. It was given for attention, not growth.

Belief is about action. It is not about mindless activities and contests, yet the active practice in daily living and behavior in common relationships. Words should be given based on experiences of fulfillment, not on observed opinions. They should only be heard when the behavior is virtuous.

Am reminded of a particular teaching Yahshua gave, in which his disciples murmured "This is a hard saying. Who can hear it?" Many of them went back and walked with him no more.

Yahshua wasn't afraid to offend them—for he was far more concerned about presenting the truth than catering to their personal preferences.

Those who are called to speak out cannot be afraid of itching ears—this includes your own. And do not worry so much about what others call you—let them figure it out as they awake. Your focus should be towards putting the standards (not your own) into practice.

Simply listen to the Father and do what he says.

As with the menu, names serve a purpose in defining a generalized serving—it does not, though, substitute for the meal's taste, quality, preparedness, or service. This is the reality many fail to understand.

It is the active practice we are to look upon.

Invulnerable

3/27/19

Our reliability on man's devices has presented us with a false sense of security.

We assume that just because many rely heavily on these modern-day conveniences (although prone to minor adjustments) cannot fail in the grand scheme of things. This invulnerability creates in us the inability to prepare ourselves for future shifts which threaten to disrupt our personal world.

It reminds me of the disastrous storms, fires, and earthquakes which have come upon the coastlines—even when authorities give ample warning to leave, we oftentimes hear of those who stay in their homes with stubbornness, believing they will be able to overcome the great onslaught by their lonesome.

As with these disasters, many have taken refuge in the global, social construct—even though warning signs have shown what is coming straight for them. Many refuse to listen to the observant while giving heed to their present comforts.

Just as a road sign informs us of our destination—sometimes many miles in advance—the Father has also presented us queue signs to warn us of what is to come. These signals are not always immediate, yet are very consistent.

Let us be reminded of the words from Isaiah 40. There is a cry coming from the wilderness—a cry to prepare ourselves for the way, to make straight in the desert a highway. It is a cry which goes as such: "Every valley shall be exalted—every mountain and hill shall be made low. The crooked shall be made straight and the rough places plain."

Just as in days of Isaiah, today we find ample workmen melting graven images. We find goldsmiths spreading these vain objects with gold and casting upon them silver chains.

Many lift up their devices in arrogance and declare, “We know it all!”

Have we not known? Have we not heard? Have we not been told from the very beginning?

“All flesh is grass, and all the godliness thereof is as the flower of the field. The grass withers and the flower fades—because the spirit of Yah blows upon it. Surely the people are as the grass.”

“But they that wait upon Him shall renew their strength. They shall mount up with wings as eagles. They shall run and not be weary. They shall walk and not faint.”

The Initiate Mentality

4/26/19

Prior to receiving and sharing the original Jedihood message, a two-year task was given to test the waters in order to learn the current state within certain individuals. The state of how they were a decade prior was compared to their current state.

At first, believed this would be rather difficult—yet it turned out to be a rather blatant observation.

Instead of growth, there were vast cases of moral depletion and self abuse. Those who practice such are referred to as fallen ones (or rogue) and usually hide themselves with fronts of false sincerity.

These fronts are usually dressed with:

- Heavy reliance on organizational procedure (this can include clothing apparel)
- Highly publicized social/ritual activities (outward perception)
- Quantity (membership/monetization) over quality (spiritual depth, discernment)
- Endless provision of doctrinal mazes (purposefully written to be non-conclusive)
- Emphasis on memorization/quotation (which is promoted over practical application)
- Objects of worship and dependency (pendants, idols, drugs, incense, etc.)

You may notice the focus for these items is, essentially, appearance. This can become a stark contrast to actual reality (they are often used as invalid substitutes for maturity). The reason for its usage is because people still heavily buy into these practices, especially those who remain spiritually malnourished.

This leads to the next observance. During the search, there was a small handful that had not fallen prey to these devices yet had merely stagnated in growth. This mentality is sometimes seen as the trial of the initiate.

Similar to the Service Corps (as seen in fictional writings), many eventually turned to educational or explorational pursuits—they still seek true companionship and are attuned enough to be confronted. They are also reachable and humble enough to be shown truths.

Many though expect the teacher confrontation to come by itself. When the calling is given and eventually becomes stronger, it is up to the person to perform a mutual commitment—not the teacher.

Why this expectation? The fallen groups have overly catered to curious bystanders in order to get more blood. This, in turn, teaches them to drastically water down expectation.

Instead of places of growth and healing, these groups have become business venues which promote heavily ranked, pyramid-scheme type structures. Once invested, the lure becomes too daunting to resist—the dependency on the milk requires a mother to consistently provide substance for bare survival.

Maturity is essential to purposefully continue in this life. The meat of the word, though, can only come to those who are called—those who are willing to let go of the milk for greater, fuller subsistence.

Without relationship with the Father, we are lost and confused, doing things according to immature counsel. For growth to occur, dependency must transition into responsibility—hence the need for the father figure.

The Father's ways are foreign to those who do not listen to his commands—for it requires the letting go of crutches and self-focused pursuits in order to follow his calling.

His ways require the unlearning of the learned—a metamorphosis. In other words, it requires adulthood.

Seekers of truth—you are to be prepared for the coming of the Master. When you hear him, do not flee from his calling. Take hold of his redemption.

The Nocturnal Song

5/7/19

In the early hours (before sunrise), there is a particular bird which begins to sing outside my bedroom wall during the night. The bird sings alone for quite some time—it is still dark and everyone else is asleep.

Still, the song remains noticeable and unafraid.

The song left an impression when waking up this morning. Although the bird starts alone in its prophecy, eventually it is proven correct, waking other birds to join alongside its calling. Its song remains a consistent indicator of the upcoming future.

Many now are sleeping in darkness. Eventually a cry is heard, a voice from the wilderness. Some look up and see no light—they return once more to their slumber. Others mock and ridicule, thinking the sign was given by a crazy old man. Both pay it no mind.

It reminds me of what Peter wrote considering the days of Noah. Scoffers shall come in the last days, those who walk after their own lusts. They will ask, “Where is the promise of his coming? For since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as from the beginning of creation.”

For this they are willingly ignorant.

Yet the Father does not slack concerning his promises (even though others consider it as slackness). He is long suffering. He is not willing for any of his people to perish.

The song, although nocturnal, sings clearly to those who hear it—for it is the song of promise to the redeemed. It speaks to us of the upcoming light, which all of us, eventually, will come to terms with. Will it display our virtues... or expose our filthiness?

Do not be fooled by the present dimness. This is the sign to be sober— to be vigilant. Although tempting, we must not fall prey to the ways of slumber.

Will you hear the song playing outside your bedroom wall?

Business of the Day

5/30/19

We are constantly being bombarded with so many minuscule, frivolous things. As the world continues to bring about incremental tidal waves of strife, many still hearken as before, steeping themselves further and further into a prison of shallowness.

By seeking personal, temporal wisdom, humanity continues to promote a steadfast foolishness. A mirage of false necessity ensues.

Still, many remain too occupied to notice.

This is not to imply that busyness is an evil endeavor (an idle laziness leads to great despair). With that said, it is easy to be engaged in ill-tempered quests which eventually come to absolutely nothing. This is why it is important to stop relying on self-catered thinking—for the flesh is but a temporary experience.

As was spoken by Yahshua in book of Matthew, we must not overly focus “where moth and rust corrupt and where thieves break through and steal—for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.”

Are we seeking first the kingdom, taking heed to the compass provided? Or are we seeking the things of the Gentile mind—thereby ignoring our Fatherly calling?

This is a time for the called-out ones to be sober—let the others worry about the daily affairs (that is their task). You, on the other hand, are meant to participate in a greater task. This is a time to prepare and get your house in order, to clean out the skeletons within your closet. This is the real business of the day.

A day is coming when you will be thoroughly tested and tried. Will you take heed to your true responsibilities—or will you fall to the others?

Bogged Down in Procedure

6/9/19

Some have pondered why so many groups have gotten themselves so steeped in religious ritual, organizational procedures, academic and philosophical opaqueness, and/or systematic meticulousness—such as with ranking systems, monetization, policies, and so forth—while, at the same time, losing their moral and spiritual integrity.

People have asked how to clean up these things. What these pursuits fail to realize is that these outcomes are simply external signs to a greater problem. These external fruits show us the problem lies with the very conception they practice—that the practices themselves are built on a system constructed primarily by man's thoughts of selfishness.

Human beings, on their own accord, will rationalize abstraction in which one can manipulate, mold, or take power of. These are the ways we must be careful not to condone.

Yet, even today, how many attempt to find answers to please the god of the self? This action simply sows the seeds of strife within a once fertile garden.

Let it be explained what is meant by this abstraction. For example, stop for a moment and see how one uses the word "Jedi." Look at it closely. When you say it, are you referring to its active performance... or simply referring to a construct? It is most often the latter.

Is it not the same when people say they are of a particular religious or political sect? Indeed, quite so.

This is why so many get into the confusion of various ways, shadings, and images (dare it be said idols). Don't get this wrong—the word Jedi is true and points to a real practice—yet so many have invented paths which take away its actual meaning, ignoring its important act by molding it into a graven object. The object then begins to take place of the reality.

This particular craftiness is very much seen in the scriptures. Prophets, such as Yermiyahu (Jeremiah) and Yahshua, saw the endless sacrifice of animals without true repentance—it was as if the ritual itself made up for the lack of sincerity.

Today is seen the very same thing. Instead of being washed in the river of cleanliness, for instance, we now have a systematic ritual called Baptism that we can hang our hat on—and instead of being rebirthed into a life of righteousness, we now place our faith in a “Born Again” conception date.

This is not to say the rituals mentioned are innately evil—it is simply pointing out how human beings have a horrible habit of focusing solely on ritual instead of following the actual performance the ritual is pointing towards. In essence, they look to the object instead of understanding the object lesson.

This is what led ancient Israel into worshiping graven conceptions, leading them to moral, spiritual decline.

When it comes to the actual Jedi concept, many simply have no clue what the word means. As we have learned in this message, Yedah/Yediah (in the ancient tongue) means ‘to know’. It refers to an act that is to be performed—a deep, spiritual connection with the higher will (Father).

So, when people say they are a Jedi they are essentially saying they supposedly have this connection—yet, when they are seen to not practice accordingly, what does this tell us? It tells us that even though one may have a master rank, organize a top-of-the-line religious movement, have thousands of followers in their pocket, it means absolutely nothing if the way of living isn’t heeded.

Such a person is simply playing dress-up, placing themselves in delusion in order to portray their individual self-practices as valid.

The Father, through the prophet Yeshayahu (Isaiah), once said that all of our own self-righteousness (however noble) is as filthy rags.

So many hide their vile practices within an outward coating of nobility, focusing on vices instead of virtue—this can sometimes be hard to decipher. The Father, on the other hand, can see right through this.

Many think Yahshua came to build an organization, temple, or religious group—he did not come to promote a faction of man's ways. Why do you think he was so upset with the Pharisees and Sadducees, purposely breaking their fence laws? He came, instead, to bring the kingdom.

Most people don't understand what this kingdom is because they are so stuck in graven thinking—he is not solely referring to a physical kingdom, yet a spiritual one. The word kingdom refers to a realm, a domain—not primarily a building or construct.

How does this kingdom come? It comes through a daily, active practice of the Father's will. That is what "daily bread" means in what is known as The Lord's Prayer.

This act, though, promotes the giving of your selfish will to His Will—not to a collection of selfish wills (such as how people use the concept of the Force).

"Whosoever shall seek to save his life shall lose it—and whosoever shall lose his life shall save it."

Did you ever notice that, in George Lucas' Star Wars, those who followed the greater will were alive in spirit after death? They were ghosts in spirit because they practiced in spirit.

This is merely an object lesson to show the importance of an active practice—one that is alive and breathing. The chosen are to heed the calling of the greater will, the higher will (the Father). This cannot be stressed enough, for they are those who follow and obey the order—not "The Jedi Order" of man's construct.

What is so baffling is people do not understand the Star Wars Prequels were showing how the Jedi structure eventually allowed the destruction of its own Jedi practitioners—yet why are so many still overly focused on such structures? We should already realize that the promotions of these particular towers are simply leading to more Count Dookus and fallen Anakins—a self-made arrogance that seeks more power, influence, and control.

All of these towers will eventually fall because they are built on the sands of time—only those who build upon the rock will survive the rain and floods.

We have been warned.

So when those of you go to visit an assembly, look at the words they portray. The words may sound good (may even have bits of truth in them), yet look at the focus of those words—are they focused on the higher will, or are they focused on self?

“Your focus determines your reality.”

Until we stop placing our faith and loyalty to cardboard cutouts, we will keep finding the fruits of organized madness and spiritual decline lying outside our front door.

This is the time to put away the graven images to see what it actually means to be a guardian of peace and justice.

Thoughts of the Heart

6/30/19

There is a passage of scripture given prior to the flood of Noah, in which the Father notes how the imagination of man's heart was only evil continually.

This can be compared to what Yahshua gives in Matthew 24: "As the days of Noah were, so shall the coming of the son of man."

"For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and given in marriage—until the day that Noah entered into the ark. They knew not until the flood came and took them all away."

There have been many slothful servants—many called-out guardians have numbed themselves towards the current state of affairs. If they had known of the thief that is to come, they would have watched, not suffering his house to be broken off.

So enters in another lord.

The order given out by dark insidiousness is a very subtle command. It is deceptive—it is one which slowly undermines the very fabric of righteousness.

While this occurs, we see those with great talents hide them under the earth. They fear adversity, placing non-earned faith in cloned armies. Many, in fact, seek to reap what they have not sown—such unprofitable actions will only lead to darkness.

My heart yearns for certain people to be attuned, yet cannot force them to act. Eventually one must go within the ark of preparation and allow its door to close—for this is not a time for false excitement or to convince the unconvinced.

This is the time to awaken those who dare to turn around and see the execution before it happens.

"Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he comes shall find so doing."

Fiery Furnace

7/4/19

Some have wondered why this message has not been given directly to other groups. Simply have not been called to go into their camps at this time, nor find any inclination to do so. If there is a Ninevah, it will be known (it has been rare to see sackcloth).

The humble are the main focus at this hour—they are worth the Father's full attention at this time.

It is up to certain chosen people—those who find and relate to this message—to have a desire to share it amongst their peers without any coercion. If it goes to deaf ears then it is meant to do so.

At the very least it is off of my head. That is the role of the guardian.

The reason why this message has remained for the years it has is because the fire cannot be quenched—its stance only urges the curious to seek what has been censored.

Perhaps a few will be worthy to take the sword from the stone. As a forgotten voice once said, “Time will tell as we tell time as well.”

For most, this message has created a gnashing of teeth—that is actually part of its purpose. It is to be a burdensome stone.

All who burden themselves with this stone shall be cut in pieces. He who falls on the stone shall be broken—but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. It shall be a cup of trembling for the faithless, a hearth of fire among the wood. It is as a torch of fire upon a sheaf (you can look up the scriptural references for yourself).

The best thing to do is for us to listen and not speak—if one speaks, one must be ready for the onslaught. The foolish man will unsheathe his sword without hitting anything—he will come back home thinking he has succeeded. Let him live with that delusion.

The Father's words will not be mocked—for the guilty will reveal themselves.

One cannot fight spirit with fleshly tools. One must temper their sword amongst the fire of cleansing. One must also have the proper garments.

Learn to pass the four trials. The first is humility—only the penitent man will pass the first marker. Yet, once inside, you must be courageous dear one, standing on the word of the almighty.

When you have gotten past this point, connect, let it be known, and these words will continue in your hearing.

The Father's Crusade

8/3/19

The Father has asked to present another message prior to the completion of the first full written release.

Some may not understand how a man can keep in pursuit, especially after having so many hurdles attempting to stop this message from taking root.

This is because the words are true. It is also because this message is founded on words from the Father—not a man.

The simple sign of this message continuing as it has is a testament of itself—no one can stop unless the Father wills it to be stopped. Many have attempted to do so and have failed. This is because they are afraid of what is to come. They are also ignorant of the signs of the times—for they follow the ways of death and chaos. They have allowed their self-passions to take over their being with unchecked emotions.

This, along with their accumulation of vices, has weakened their attentiveness—for they are not attuned.

They have made it easy for this spirit to surround their camps. As with what happened to Belshazzar, or the Pharaoh who confronted Moshe, certain leaders have no clue as to what is coming.

No one can stop it—including this person. It will continue.

This person has asked the Father for the wisdom to not release these written works in copyright, let alone stamp a barcode in the back of its cover (no one should gain financially from this, for it is a free gift). This flesh has also been very hesitant to put any specific name on the cover—as this holy directive is not of a man's invention. These decisions are to help the Father's words go beyond mere mortals.

With this said, here are some words he has put within this being:

For those who continue to have a haughty spirit—your towers and wine presses will wane and not produce. This will continue until you have humbled yourself and tug on the garment. Until then, you will eat static—no chosen ones will come to visit you.

Certain individuals have published the Father's name alongside the works of soothsayers and mystics. The Father's name will not be mocked—you will be shown this error. For those who see it and turn from this misunderstanding, you will be given greater truths. As for those who continue in error after being shown, you will be held accountable for your actions—no more light will be produced from you.

As for the others, there are certain people who simply cannot understand these words at this time—do not be ashamed. You do not have to grasp (or even believe) everything that is said at this very moment. You are where you are. Yet, if you lift up those who teach these very truths, and partake with them as friends, you will not be forgotten—your actions will speak clearer than those who do not.

If only some of you were open to the ways of life—you would see blessings come to your doorstep. You would find healing. Do not go about your own ways—for they are the ways of foolishness. Find redemption, grab the true compass, and return back to the Way.

For those who sincerely hear this message—the Father is speaking to you. It is not too late—if it was, he would not have given this message to you. This does not mean though it will continue in your hearing without effort. Inspect yourself now—clean up the trash from within your gates. Put the Father's words above your own.

Many have been stooped into thinking the Father's ways were man's ways—this is because men have manipulated his words in order to profit from them. You have simply inherited their lies. He is not an impersonal object—he is a real father who cares and loves. Return home to him and be blessed.

These words will continue to be spoken as long as there is a person out there who cries for the Father's name to be revealed. As to this person—he has heard your cries. He has sent his servants to reach out to you.

As long as you cry out to him, they will not remain silent. He will put a ringing in their ear.

Be blessed and let the Father be with you.

An Empire of Dreams

8/17/19

When reflecting upon the dream from twenty years back, remember the portion in which this person looked inside a once familiar house to see Stormtroopers marching in unison. It was quite shocking to see such—to witness a group who had lost their identity in order to engulf themselves to imperial conditioning.

This, though, was the price many were willing to pay to create a mighty, yet fallen, empire—for it had become their empire of dreams.

The community this person once helped to create used to stand for something more. Yet, over time, as a pompous, religious sensationalism has taken hold, it has lost its direction, placing upon itself a false facade of nobility. In short, whatever fundamental truths were previously held appear to have been shed—a boisterous, loud noise has become (in many people's minds) far more important than a sincere, moral practice.

Fads come and fads go—yet what matters at this time are those who earnestly seek refuge upon the rock of virtue. Instead of looking for phony credentials, this is the moment to look within your heart. You will be seen for how you perform—will you act wisely, or foolishly? Will you look to the true covering instead of the clothing? Will you commit to the worthy deed (even while no one is looking), or flaunt it openly in order to boost your audience ratings?

In the end, we will all be judged by these sorts of questions.

Many have wielded their weapons with skill and molded their bodies to great fitness—yet the spirits, when tested, will ultimately decide their path. The eager soldier, without the backing of the righteous General, will not withstand the fight.

This empire may wear its signet proudly—yet only for a season. It is but one of many that have come and gone.

We Were Like Them That Dream

9/26/19

The passage of Psalms 126, after its initial reading, has remained part of a solemn spirit for some weeks. Perhaps solemnity itself has helped kept its words from being forgotten.

Going to go ahead and speak about it.

Upon reflection, the words appear to mirror the very experiences captured by this person's online adventures. It recalls, for instance, a time of plenty, when young people came to spiritual discovery—yet it also witnesses a time which burdened individuals remain stuck in spiritual captivity.

Many tears have been sowed for these oppressed people. Some of these tears, in fact, have been for the very ones who have come against this message. Within those very tears, though, sows the seeds of joy.

Although there have been many tares of deception found within the wheat fields of substance, there comes a time to gather and bring in the sheaves for a great feast. Perhaps, just perhaps, such a time will come upon us.

The tares, in the very act of this gathering, will be separated and burned. It is through the destruction of temples (just as it was for the people who initially sung this psalm) that a foundation will form, providing great relief and celebration.

Such times of fasting have brought great and mighty blessings.

In the final verse, it states, “he that goes forth and weeps, bearing precious seed, shall in no doubt come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.”

Perhaps he will come again—removing captivity in order to embrace a plentiful harvest.

So it is for those who dream.

The Greater Success

11/5/19

Some time has passed since placing together a group of words like this for public viewing. Because of such, it has been somewhat difficult remembering how to piece them together—especially as recent truth has been narrowly shared to someone privately.

This interruption is being given to point out an exerted, over-performed practice which many of us primarily feel is important and healthy, yet actually is not. In fact, it is an activity which can be difficult to even recognize when applied effectively (notably when it brings about a desired result).

Yet, upon closer examination, a hidden bit of dirt behind the ears can be revealed.

Have found much success when tackling great labors (this person, as some of you out there, works very hard to do everything humanly possible to get the job done). Most of the time things go very well. Although, during times of great focus, a challenge suddenly diverts from the harbor for no apparent reason—even during the eve of many great successes.

It is when such situations happen that our human frailty is revealed—a deep sorrow and frustration can result. Why can it not be fixed?

The Father has provided great strength to overcome many obstacles. It is his strength, and his strength alone, which has produced great success. Yet, within an array of successes, one can begin to glance upon one's own strength for provision. This is dangerous.

Just as the apostle Peter began to sink from his walk on water, so do many descend upon their own provisioning.

Society worships personal success. This is partly because our world has placed great amounts of people's livelihood on unstable shares. In effect, the fears of instability take hold, compelling many towards unnecessary stresses and heartaches.

Yet, in so doing, many fail to seek the greater success.

It is good for us to be reminded of how fragile and unstable our ways can become—to be loosened away from slight fantasies which promote the idea that we are in complete and total control of our lives. The sooner this awakening happens, the better—for it is better to stumble upon a small stone than to plummet into the large chasm.

Let us be welcomed to the reminder—to ask for his guidance in times of unnoticed haughtiness and tampered moments of self-glory. The Father will gently remind us when we are willing to follow his direction through and through.

Seeker of the Contrite Heart

12/22/19

This person has had some deep, heartfelt conversations with a small group of individuals for some time now. It has been a welcoming experience to say the least—to centralize upon those who earnestly seek the Father's ways within an intimate, private setting. Have gotten so involved in such that many recent revelations has been presented away from public view, shared mainly to those within this precious meeting ground.

Sadly many have forgotten how to have such kindred connections, especially when it comes to vital, spiritual matters. Conversations today are heavily pressured by social conditions, conditions which intimidate people to avoid deeper subjects. This promotes sanctions favoring non-critically minded topics, many which have little to do with chastity or uprightness.

For instance, it is far easier to criticize a team, recipe, or movie than it is to delve into the essence of virtue or salvation. It is this sort of apathy which has strongly limited this person's audience.

Although there are many who desire to be released from their pain, looking for an outside antidote to free them, they do not pursue responsibility for the very acts which lead to their torment. Hyperactivity disorders have taken over the need for patience and restraint, while the plea for ignorance (especially towards lewd behavior) has given rise to non-restrained wantonness and immorality.

Plenty have catered on personal strength to succeed, yet what of those who position themselves towards the higher calling? These are the people worth seeking at this hour.

The quest is to find those who sincerely strive to surrender themselves to a life of righteousness. Believe it or not, though a vast population may boast such living, they are practically found few and far between—yet it is the contrite heart this person seeks after.

The path of knighthood begins with those who humble themselves, bringing about the fasting of pleasures in order to sustain a life of purity. The release of guilt can only come from the act of sacrifice—and it is through the Father's atonement which renews our lives for a greater destiny. By helping those upon such a voyage, one grows the Father's connection within themselves.

Those pointed to this path are welcome to participate, though this is said specifically to find the called-out ones—not to herd in a rebellious flock. Given this, the message here remains as a lighthouse to those who seek it.

By Their Fruits

12/25/19

A familiar passage of scripture will be shared today. It concerns a simple, yet forgotten principle which needs to be reiterated at this time. How quickly it has been forgotten.

It has to do with false messages. A vast array early on have appeared as a meekly sheep—yet, when under close inspection, are found to be ravenous as the wolf, seeking whom they can devour. These messages have brought about plagues of depression, malice, incest, and disease, filling the land with bitter famine and desolation.

This inspection is performed by witnessing their fruits. Yahshua speaks of this essential act in the gospel of Matthew:

“You will know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so, every good tree brings forth good fruit—yet a corrupt tree brings forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit; neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Every tree that brings not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire. For this reason, by their fruits you will know them.”

This knowing has helped this person to avoid many broad, popular paths which lead to destruction. Patient observance is vital towards witnessing the roots of false direction—even though the outward branches may appear genuine, the corrupted seeds within eventually show themselves in due season.

When noting these paths, one begins to discover various fruits of instability, pride, and greed, as well as the rebellious, rivalrous-types of foul spirits. Some of these unclean, disorderly spirits are flaunted in a way they can be clearly viewed from the outside—even though, from the inside, they present themselves with auras of cleanliness and order.

Given the hyperactive disorders which run rampant in our culture, merely a momentary abstinence can present an accurate interpretation.

As declared in Yahshua's message, not only does the evil tree suffer in the hewing and judgment of fire, yet also the unproductive tree for not bearing fruit in its season. There are many trees which lay barren and infertile upon the path of truth, especially during this season in history. Nothing fresh and insightful comes out of the observed camps anymore—they remain in a shallow world. It is signs as these which should warn faithful practitioners to avoid them altogether.

The reason why we find so many weak Ahabs and haughty Jezebels in leadership is simple—we find a community which has compromised their morality, tolerating behaviors of vice over virtue and worshiping false, defiled spirits. Those who eat of the fruit of their leading will be brought to their examples of weakness and haughtiness.

Yet when will a group of people come who will stand faithful, unafraid to name the animals according to their kinds? This is not the time for these chosen to act as the haughty scribes do in their temples! Seek the authority of the Father—for it is he who gives wisdom to those who seek his face. He disables the plans of the proud and rises up servants over kings.

“Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?” Even so, by their fruits you will know them.

Complication

1/16/20

The walk of servant living (knighthood) is not a complicated motion—it is a dedicated, submissive one. Given this, it is false practice which has created such complication.

Such living, for instance, is typically presented with emotional and rational abstraction, especially towards actions which appear too strenuous or controversial. Some have also presented pyramid schemes, selfishly controlling progress through multiple layers of convoluted rites.

Why is this? It is because complication can hide nakedness. It can also create excuse.

If the reflection of true chivalry was given, a vast majority who express themselves with such would not recognize it, let alone condone it—for the practice has been artificially refined to fit personal preference.

The practice witnessed today is a genetic modification—a sickened concoction of preservatives which do more to protect unnatural refinements than preserve core ingredients. Its unadulterated state is faintly portrayed within the bubbles of false imagination.

In fact, such bubbles are not really living—they are a slow, anguished death.

How can we know the original practice from the counterfeit? This is by taking careful note of the responses. A worthy pursuer will instruct righteousness with rigor, patience, and chastisement, doing so with full sincerity and confidence (the reader should look up these important words, go over them, and place them deep within their spirit). The untrained, though, will confront these methods as an outside threat, shunning them away instead of allowing them to look deep within one's soul. Such a latter response fails to remove the beam from the eye, keeping one stumbled upon the broad path.

Let this be said—if any are training without the virtues as practiced by the worthy, ask for forgiveness from your pupil(s), concede the arrangement, and bring yourself low to the ground so you may grasp the essence of its necessity. Only until these virtues are understood should you even consider playing with them.

Along with the lack of submissive training is found an abundantly compromised, weakened faith. If one cannot confront the challenge of the mirror, especially when given years to grow after being inducted, then let it be known—one needs to relearn what has been taught. Such a person is still an infant.

With that said, infants are to be given more respect than the pseudo-users—for non-intentional ignorance can be cured. A stiff-necked arrogance, on the other hand, is an entirely different matter.

This is a time to be on guard dear ones. Guard the true faith. For if your brother sins, rebuke him—and when he repents, forgive. We are to do this because we should love our brothers and sisters—and without such response, there is no release.

A loving father will properly discipline his children. He does not throw away the rules—nor does he abuse them. He is centered, knowing full well the responsibility which is to be fulfilled.

Allow this father to come within you. Allow his strictness to work out a proper, fair justice. It is this clean spirit which will show us how to protect the weak and defend the innocent.

This truth, when revealed, can break an entire legion of falsehoods. Although it may not be acknowledged to first-hand, when heard it cannot be denied—for what should be listened to more: a constant presentation of flavored lies or a consistent rebuke of wholesome truth?

Which one will help us cross the pit of stagnation? It is not a complicated matter.

Let us not deny his ways.

Talk Too Much

1/18/20

Too many words fall off the palettes of various lips without properly presenting the matter to the higher will. Because of this, many are led by jabber than by genuine direction—it is rather revolting to see such rampant, unchecked spew.

Briefly glanced at some recent chatter taking place in various corners—it does not take long before the browser tabs close. Whenever an inclination comes of a moment to address, the actions of the participants determine its timing indefinite.

So very few know how to ward the tongue. If one cannot guard this most powerful instrument, how can one be placed in position to guard towers, let alone the minds of others?

Those who desire greater things should first find faithfulness in the little—for within the little are found the great. Do not be concerned about sensing beyond until you have gathered your immediate senses. Firstly, do you give order to your ear, “When you hear this falsehood, you will not act according to it”? Do you also instruct your taste, “Although this gives pleasant flavor, it will not determine my well-being”?

Fellow readers, it is this attuned community you are to lead—and if these members cannot work in unison, do not expect the outwardly to do the same. The outward result is a mere reflection of the inner.

Before a thought comes to your head from the outside, be swift to protect its inner chamber—and when such has been given access, allow a fatherly refinement to take place before you produce. Do these regularly to the point the act becomes spontaneous... so that when you speak, you speak wholesomely. This practice will save you many cycles of grief and torment.

And when the higher will speaks, be silent.
He is to be master of the house.
Listen attentively and obey his commands.
Do not take it outside unless you have clearance.
And never, ever, hold yourself higher than him.

When you have finally been given directive to speak, speak as a servant who reveres the assignment—for those who respect the King will respect his message, along with his messenger.

Also take note of those who excel at reciting facts—they do not necessarily prove their excellence in interpretation. A recital, for instance, may be quite logical and elaborate, yet does not always garner a praising response. Rise above the pettiness.

A silent one, at times, gives appearance of good counsel and experience. Yet when it comes time to speak, speak, and speak it faithfully. As the moon, you will turn tides from their present motions—and the pull will be too great to subdue.

Into the Ark

2/13/20

Noach (Noah), a chosen one, heard the voice of the Father and did according to the Father's will. In so doing, not only was Noach saved—his family, along with the called-out animals, were saved as well.

Although it is easy to browse through what this righteous one did, it is essential to take upon a closer inspection. This is why we will dig a bit deeper into the story to learn more of his important message.

Let us first note that Noach was given favor—not only by heeding the Father's instructions, yet by remaining faithful in completing the Father's commands (however detailed or difficult they would become). Because of this, Noach's right living was confirmed—it was witnessed from the food he prepared, the animals he gathered, and the sanctuary he constructed. These actions were made possible through Noach's steadfast obedience.

We should also note what others during his time did not do. Instead of faithfully responding to the upcoming storm, which was prophesied by the teacher Henoch (Enoch) through the life and death of his son Methuselah, the people were too occupied to take heed of Noach's performance. Although many animals were called into the ark, very few people recognized a similar appointment.

Some reading this may have been given a similar task as Noach—yet the focus and urgency needed requires a maturity only few are able to contain. For us to yield to this development, a consistent, humbling contemplation is needed.

With that said, not everyone has been told to build an ark—some are simply told to come inside it before the storm appears. Both tasks, though, will appear difficult among a vulgar crowd.

Noach's message may have appeared divisive and unpopular to many at that time—in the end, though, it was found to be one of promise and deliverance. This is why it is essential to recognize Noach's message to us today. As Yahshua once prophesied to his disciples, "as the days of Noach were, so will the coming of the Son of Man." Before the flood, many ate, drank, and married until the day Noach entered the ark. They did not know until the flood came and took them away.

The Father desires certain people to know what is to come, although we must, as Noach did, be willing to obey and perform. To know the Father requires a fervent relationship—one that is able to bend in order for the saving to occur. We can find relationship by heeding his call and acting out his higher will.

If one is to be properly knighted, one must kneel. Let us be gifted with the task to surrender ourselves—and, in so doing, be given the keys to salvation.

Shame

3/7/20

Going to delve in an act hardly practiced in today's world. It has to do with a very appropriate (yet foreignly absent) response to actions which are notably corrupt, devious, and immoral. In other words, it is a lack of the blush response.

In the book of Yirmiyahu (Jeremiah), the Father says the following:

"Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? No, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush—therefore shall they fall among them that fall. In the time of their visitation they shall be cast down (8:12)."

Take, for example, this response in 2018 from an individual representing the pseudo-Jedi (when given the message of humility): "I had humility once. Then I took some antibiotics and it flushed right through my system." And so this message was also flushed down by many—yet today, with the casting down more prevalent, it cannot be said certain groups weren't warned appropriately.

We hear of many who speak of honor, yet when it comes to maintaining and enforcing that very honor, so many epically fail to even speak up for it. Certain people preach the enforcement of prowess, for instance, yet are fully willing to compromise excellence for religious and/or philosophical dogma.

False justice, now encumbered by the heaviest of biases, seeks to boost vanity over honesty. Hypocrisy, is indeed, a worst enemy.

Is there any shame?

Shame should be a natural response to those participating in wrong behavior—for humiliation provides the great cure for the prideful. Pride always comes before the fall. As with any child being disciplined by a parent, the lowering to a humbled state is better done earlier than later in the scolding process.

Yet, instead of heading to vices which covers this scolding, accept it and grow from it. This is how we learn and mature.

Brothers and sisters... it is the fessing up to mistakes which displays honor—not the consistent denial of a broken practice. Stand up for what is right, and in open fashion—then you will once again be treated with the very respect you have just presented.

The Plague

3/21/20

Today, when logging in to see the feed from an old Facebook placeholder, noticed an oasis of chatter regarding the virus situation. Many people spoke boldly while presenting such and such reasoning for such and such stance, whether it referred to public reaction, governmental response, scientific observation, and so on. Given this, the presentations began to come together like a great noise.

A realization began to come over this person that there definitely is a virus out there. Perhaps a better way to refer to it would be a plague, or spirit. In short, it is a plague of the spirit of fear—specifically, a fear of the unholy.

This spirit was also known by the heathen as the spirit of Pan, a Greek god in ancient times. This is where society gets such words as panic, pandemic, pandemonium, and other such words. It is the spirit of sudden, uncontrolled fear which leads to nonsensical, irrational behavior.

Do we not see this spirit among the people today?

The scriptures clarify to us that the Father's children are not to partake in this unholy fear. The Father spoke to the prophet Haggai, for instance, and said to fear not when the nations are shaken. In the times of the Exodus, Moshe exclaimed to his people to fear not the Egyptians while given the salvation of Yah. "Fear and dread shall fall upon them instead."

"For Yah has not given us this spirit of fear," says Shaul to Timotheus, "but of power, love, and of a sound mind."

The scriptures, though, clearly point out who we are to truly revere and place our attention towards at this hour. This is the Father in Heaven. If we respect his ways and precepts, and follow them righteously, we will not fear the plagues that are poured out upon the nations—for this is just a beginning of many sorrows to come.

When a soldier reveres the military general in command, that person will have little to no concern over the enemy one is up against—for the reverence given to the commander is stronger than the concern for the enemy. The soldier will be given courage and the strength to fight effectively.

Such a reverence should be expressed by the guardians of the Father's word. When these soldiers learn trust in the Father, realizing that his defense is more than sufficient, they will be provided a protection that will not wane.

By relying on the Father ways, and doing what he says, we have nothing to fear of man's devices.

So, for those who are reading this, please note the following: This is a time of repentance and to clean your house from profane things. Focus your cleaning to your most inner chambers this Spring, seeking the Father with your whole heart. Do this and you will not fear as the world does.

“Come out of her, my people, so that you not partake of her sins and receive not of her plagues.”

The Promotion

4/10/20

Over the last twenty years, have observed a significant increase of incentives to self-promote oneself for public exposure. Such incentives have strayed people towards various imaginations, stressing sensationalism (and the pocketbook) over the actual validity of the message and action given. The world's attention has also delved further and further to those who learn to effectively advertise themselves over the actual validity of performance. This misleading reward has caused great problems, revealing how easily we can be swayed.

How easy it is, for instance, to look at the amount of views instead of the measure of truths! This is a testament to the great apathy towards authenticity and purity.

There is, though, a promotion hardly spoken about, especially during these times of mindless spectacle and self-gluttony. People sense its need (especially when partaking in playful simulation) yet cannot grasp its actual condition—this is because they search according to their own terminology instead of acknowledging their self-futility.

The greater accolade will only present itself to those able to kneel towards a far greater responsibility. Only when we have proven our valor in the face of great, monumental challenges can such a presentation manifest.

Contrary to belief, these challenges cannot be surpassed through self-attainment—for it requires a challenge of surrender.

Knighthood, my friends, takes surrender.

To surpass these challenges, we must commit towards the daily fasting of ourselves in order to appeal to the greater source. This source comes from the Father in heaven. Only when we have fully demonstrated our loyalty to the Father (instead of the vulgar enticements from the crowd) can we partake of a ceremony of his choosing.

The Father's loyalty is to be completed with virtues as honesty, courage, and humility. If any out there are found with no such virtue, this accolade cannot be legitimately bestowed—no matter how actively publicized it is paraded. Man himself cannot bestow such recognition.

“Do not boast so proudly, or let arrogance come from your mouth—for Yah is an Elohim who knows. It is by him in which actions are weighed” (1 Samuel).

Let us also be reminded that, even when bestowed, accolades can be removed just as quickly as they are acquired. In fact, spiritual mantles should be revoked from those who purposely misdirect upon the paths of carnality (this person, in short, has been called to such revoking as have full legal right to do so).

“Do not look on his countenance, or on the height of his stature,” said the Father to Samuel, “because I have refused him.”

Yet for the few who actively demonstrate his great loyalty, and may, at times, accidentally stumble upon this path of honor—the Father will judge righteously by focusing on the rule in their leading. “Man looks on the outward appearance, but Yah looks upon the heart.”

Given this—for those out there ready to mature into a walk of true knighthood, a stark realization must come upon you: An active advancing of self-attainment will not save you in the fulfillment. Only in the true display of honor can one be offered a true promotion.

Do not allow your ears to be itched by deceivers, dear brothers and sisters. Learn this now before someone convinces you otherwise.

Charity

5/9/20

After helping a friend in need, felt impressed (for some weeks now) to share insight on the highest form of love one can experience.

The scriptures mainly refer to this experience as knowing—this being a personal, intimate relationship with the Father. There are, though, some newer testament writings in which this is referred to as charity. This particular word refers to the command from the Torah (as quoted by Yahshua) to love the Father with all that you are, as well as to love others as you would yourself. It also refers to a sign of one's true loyalty to the Father's ways.

Today, charity has a different connotation than it did originally. Most people are taught that it means to provide help and support for others—whether it is raising money for a cause, making a voluntary donation or contribution, or creating a taskforce of needful services. It is also sometimes seen as a lenient compassion or concerned kindness. Although such acts support good causes, they also represent personal passions which can, at times, be rooted in selfish motivations. Examples of this are seen through the earnings of positive attention (public relations) and the exemption/reduction of payment or statute (such as taxation or communal mandate).

True charity, though, is not to be given selflessly or to comfort personal desires—it is expressed because the Father first shown such love within us. By performing this act, others are seen the will of the Father and are given the allowance to reap blessings from those who obey his word.

Charity is, essentially, an extension of his will to others.

The key understanding here is to truly experience the love the Father gives. We cannot give charity to others when we do not take the time and effort to invest in a deep, intimate relationship with the Father. How can we share the Father's love when we do not experience it within us? It is our investment which determines the experience others will receive through our giving. If it is done out of pomp or greed, for instance, people will be taught to see him in this very light.

Do not allow yourself to help steer others away from his glory. Walk according to his ways—not because you have to, yet because you love him with your whole being. By knowing the Father and doing what he says, people are given a true reflection of him.

Know him so that others can know him. This is the great law of the universe.

Leadership

5/31/20

Over the last few months, have noticed a great lack of maturity in various leadership roles—regardless of the groupings being political, religious, or communal.

Many incidents of unrest have grown exponentially, amassing in activities of blame shifting instead of a morally firm, courageous stance. Confusing laws remain enforced for the orderly while blatant crimes are excused for the disorderly. It is hypocrisy at its finest.

We also see a continued allowance of propaganda to be spewed upon the youth. To those who have encouraged such unlawfulness is repulsive—especially as they allow them to ignorantly destroy their own communities. In the end, it has brought about a clear exploitation of sincere citizens these leaders are meant to support.

The scriptures have clearly warned of such sorrows. This is why it is so vital for families to leave the larger city influences and spiritually prepare for what may come ahead. It is now up to sound minds to take heed of the signs given, getting their houses in order while they are still standing.

Now is the time for leadership from the Father himself. The practice of his ways is, very much, an essential work—even if society deems it not.

Do not keep catering to the entertainments of the world—this, fellow readers, is a distraction. Such activities will only postpone the actions you are meant to perform! Instead, use your time wisely, meditating on his words in prayer and fasting. The solution should start within your abode.

In so doing, he will lead you to still waters, restoring your soul.

The Delusion

6/27/20

“Since they did not see fit to acknowledge the Father,” as said in Shaul’s letter to the gathering in Rome, “the Father gave them over to a reprobate mind.”

The walking dead are among us today—consuming a vast, strong delusion which has overtaken our world. They stumble in the night. Although they breathe through their lungs, they are not truly alive—for Yah is the resurrection and the life. As spoken by Yahshua, “He that believes in me, though he were dead, shall live.”

Instead of humbling themselves and taking personal responsibility for their own actions, they roam the lands according to a lustful spirit that cannot be quenched. They rush quickly to topple the next tower as the current one falls to the ground. The watchers remain silent as the hordes overtake them.

As said by Yirmiyahu, “you have stricken them yet they have not grieved—you have consumed them yet they refuse to receive correction. They have made their faces harder than a rock. They have refused to return. Surely these are the poor and foolish—for they know not the way of Yah, nor the judgment of their Elohim.”

It is in this time, though, that the Father will find great men and speak to them—for they have known of his ways. They know the judgments to come, and, instead of rejecting their own creation, they embrace it—praising the Father instead of themselves.

This is the mark of a faithful, enduring heart—a meekness which will subdue the Earth. Although healthy thought is quickly censored for propagandist babble, the minds of true, living men cannot be swayed. The babble, just as Babylon, will fall.

Comfort your hearts. Just as Shaul warned to the gathering in Thessalonica, the man of sin is being revealed today. In turn, the Father will consume with the spirit of his mouth and the brightness of his coming. The Father is, indeed, coming—he is coming in a way people do not expect it. He will come through his servants. He will come through his word.

We will be established through our acknowledgment of him.

The Simulation

7/20/20

Many theories have popped up recently regarding the possibility that life could, essentially, be based on a simulation. More than ever before, people are watching movies, playing video games, and experiencing virtual reality platforms—especially as governments reinforce its remote distancing protocols.

Some, in fact, imagine a vast network of simulations within this universe. They find their current lives as merely a small, insignificant representation, an avatar which glances darkly through a virtual headset. Others see a world induced by over-hyped amusements, endless banter, and selfish, lustful motives. They see a confused, messed up place that doesn't make any sense at all. There are even those who seek whatever they can do to escape it.

As my friend noted recently, “Is this insight or insanity?”

The truth somewhat mirrors this reflection, although it is quite misunderstood. Instead of looking out there to the vastness of it all, let's look upon ourselves to see the multiple constructs surrounding our own daily living:

- The food we eat is not real, for it is a simulated, unhearty consumption
- The beverages we drink are not real, for they are chemically mixed to keep us pliable
- The news we hear is not real, for it is propagandized to enhance an outside thought
- The religious systems are not real, for they are doctored to keep us reliant on men
- The political systems are not real, for they cater to conflict instead of conclusion

The regions set within our spaces, the thoughts produced by social structures—the fight is being fought against a shadow made by people we have never heard of.

These are the simulations of man, referred to in scripture as the dragon heads of Babylon. These systems were practiced since the days of Cain, in which cities were built up in the name of arrogance and pride. It is a great, polluted mystery.

The books of Yahanan (John) make it clear. “They are from the world,” says Yahshua. “Therefore, they speak from the world’s viewpoint and the world listens to them. On the other hand, you, his children, are from Yah and have overcome the false prophets. This is because he who is in you is greater than he who is in the world.”

“I have given them your word, Father, and the world hated them. This is because they do not belong to the world—just as I myself do not belong to it.”

As hinted prior, we have a habit of noting such concerns to be way out of our reach, when, in reality, they are very close at hand—will we be beckoned towards the actions of man’s futile escape, separating ourselves further and further from our creator, or will we seek the greater heaven (the one from above)? Will we understand that these false ways on Earth exist to test our faithfulness? Will we seek the Father’s truth instead of our own?

It’s very simple, dear readers. Are you formed to this virtual world—or of the true reality?

Practical Preparation

8/22/20

For the last few weeks, have really been called to more prayer and fasting. Find it is a vital necessity as preparation for the upcoming future.

While recently dealing with two weeks of 12-hour shifts, had focused on having one main meal a day. This was also a time to test the body in consistent levels of stress. Although there have been short times of weakness (while difficult although good to experience), honestly sense the body being more attuned as it learns to handle difficult situations with a better form of calmness. The denial of certain ingredients, which ironically appear as primal staples to most people, have heightened awareness during particular times of hardship.

This is not to say this person should consistently live within such stresses—yet should learn how to handle them with better soundness. Most think, for instance, that we know ourselves very well. The truth, though, is that we do not know until brought to certain confrontations. When finding myself in desperate need, will this person turn to a brother for blame? Will a wicked thing slip out instead of an unwavering righteousness?

As a building, we won't know until we commit to the testing of our stress points. With that said, we must learn what points should be tested at this particular moment in time.

My friend Aharon spoke of a particular person who really focused on getting in physical shape while harnessing his combative skill. The focus today, though, ought to be spiritual. Some may play around with Martial Arts, for example, yet aren't prepared for situations such as Martial Law. In fact, you could have a thousand warriors of able fighting skill—yet as they deal with certain stresses (such as the lack of food and water or argumentation within the camp), will they hold before the battle is actually fought?

With that said, a war can go much further than a battle.

While greater successions of challenging survival come upon us, the wait to perform can be months and even years. Prepare yourself now for practical stresses—pressures which need a sound, spiritual mind and not just a consistent, unfaltering hand. Such things will grow as the next years come along. As with David who was able to cut off the head of the unconscious Goliath, it doesn't take much for the haughty body to stumble—yet the faithful, meekful spirit endures.

As have stated with the Jedihood message, we are passing a threshold that has been warned years in advance (instead of critics, we now hear crickets). Given this, let us keep focused on words such as the 91st Psalm:

“You will not fear the terrors of night or the arrow that flies by day, or the plague that roams in the dark,
or the scourge that wreaks havoc at noon.
A thousand may fall at your side, ten thousand at your right hand;
but it won't come near you.
Only keep your eyes open,
and you will see how the wicked are punished.”

Be Still and Know

9/19/20

Oftentimes deception can pull us towards various directions which have no purpose or meaning. It is quite easy, in fact, to enlist in causes which very much go against our own good. Although urged to run into enticing battles with weapons ablaze, such performance can devise great consequences—for both us and our loved ones.

For every action, there is a reaction. It is easy to blame the reaction—yet do we realize it is merely a response to our original action?

Instead of analyzing who should be blamed, the greater condemnation lies in our inability to take responsibility—preventing corrupt urges from controlling the senses. We must stop allowing nonsensical fears to take control of our ultimate task, understanding that such intimidation and menacing leads to callousness—not effectiveness.

What we need is not a quick jab, yet a faithful spirit. This is what it takes to cross over.

As spoken in scripture, the Israelites under Moshe cursed him for pressures made by the Egyptians as they made haste into the wilderness. “Why have you done this to us, bringing us out of Egypt?” they asked. “Didn’t we tell you in Egypt to leave us alone? We’ll just go on being slaves for the Egyptians!”

Deliverance is usually hindered by those who fear their own taskmasters (such is the slave mentality). Yet instead of reacting to communal pressure, Moshe understood the conflict would be resolved by a greater and mightier power.

“Stop being so fearful!” responded Moshe. “Remain steady and you will see how the Father is going to save you. He will do battle for you.”

Yoda in Star Wars also speaks against such mindless, emotional responses.

“Anger. Fear. Aggression. The dark side are they. Easily they flow—quick to join you in a fight.”

“Cease from anger and forsake wrath,” it says in Psalms 37. “Fret not yourself in any manner to do evil, for evildoers shall be cut off. Yet those that wait upon the Father shall inherit the earth.”

We should be mindful of this essential truth. By being still and allowing the Father to respond, we are provided the very means to settle the conflict in the manner he deems fit. We avoid the traps evoked by the wicked, walking as one of meekness and sincere confidence.

Psalms 46: “The Father makes wars to cease unto the end of the earth, breaking the bow and cutting the spear in sunder. He burns the chariot in the fire.”

“Be still, and know that I am.”

The Slumber

10/25/20

Yahseph recently made contact with the Jedihood fellowship regarding what's going on with his life. For some years, the intimacy of Jedihood has been shared with a group of people in private email—although communication has been currently lacking due to them getting distracted. Such distractions, though, can thwart us away from the real task at hand.

In response, this messenger has asked Yahseph if he can impart some helpful words in avoiding distractions:

It is often easy to allow situations to sway us away from our calling. This, in turn, can create idleness, deprivation, and spiritual starvation. Many of us have been working abnormal hours since COVID-19. Job responsibilities have decreased for some employees—yet, on the other hand, certain employees have been given significantly increased workloads, bringing about unhealthy anxiety and depression. Both situations have created an imbalance of time allocation, leading to a lack of focus towards accomplishing essential goals in our lives.

Because of this imbalance, we have a strong tendency to discharge matters essential to our survival. As a result, many are behind in the Father's class—flunking at one of the most critical times in history. This is a period of time we should be getting our houses in order, pursuing the calling instead of slumbering idly on the destined path.

As time escapes us during this global event, we are not fulfilling our duty towards others in need—be it respecting members in our household or responding effectively to those taking advantage of others. How many of us (during this rare, seasonal moment) are assisting our family members, especially those who have opportunities to perform sensibly? By turning a blind's eye to the Father's path, we impoverish ourselves in maintaining crucial genealogical relationships. We also fail to defend the unprotected. While we deprive ourselves of fundamental responsibilities, we see violence increasing everywhere. We need to wake up to what is around us and fix the issues we are meant to address.

Our world is plagued with malnourished (yet highly potential) spiritual beings. Focusing our efforts into non-essential activities is depriving us spiritually. In contrast, we should be seeking the waters of virtue—reconnecting to our dehydrated spirit. Do we have the necessary patience to pursue the nourishment our society desperately needs?

What we need right now is a spiritual awakening! Let us end the distractions which allow these disconnections to take place. Let us reprioritize our lives, poising ourselves to a state of diligence and effectiveness.

Not only our physical, but our mental and spiritual health are on the line.

So Comes the Flood

11/30/20

The warning time is almost over. Although waves have receded from the mainland, they will return with great elevation.

Many find themselves at the summit of great determinations. While huge splinters form between constructs which once appeared homogeneous, multitudes grow more resistant to heinous plans once thought to be full-proof. These workings, in turn, have become further sloppy and inefficient.

As it says in the good book, “Correction is grievous to those who forsake the way: those who hate reproof shall die” (Proverbs 15). If this world was prudent, allowing soft answers to turn away the upcoming wrath, many would be spared—yet the desire to be right in their own eyes has overtaken the senses.

They do not pay attention to what comes ahead.

Upping the ante, you see, will only go so far. Only so much credit can be declared. Eventually, the lot must be cast and the play must be shown to the dealer. Yes, some may have won yesterday—yet those who consistently gamble with their remaining virtues will lose it to the house of cards. It’s a shell game that will defeat.

Such systems are toppling down upon inspecting minds. When certain curtains are parted and the men of sin are revealed, there will be no turning back. An aggressive response will occur.

So comes the flood.

Perhaps it should be said “Brace yourself.” Then again, many could be holding dearly upon a false object. Some may indeed brace upon the solid rock until they are given the false sensation to let go. In either case, the surge could rise sooner than one can react.

Instead, let this be said: "Get out while you still can." Salvage what you will while keeping focused on the matter at hand. For every action, there is a reaction.

Rivers will rise in season... and tides always come back in.

The Contention

12/23/20

An unseen war rages. Among the battlefields spread beneath us, vain and vile confrontations clamor to-and-fro like a drunkard. This, in turn, forms dangerous rifts among those planted upon seismic, unstable waters.

What remains is an impaired and shaken world—a world which fails to ascertain the lessons of its ancient past. As a result, the war sinks deeper into a more sinister brutality.

We do not have to swim blindly in this struggle. Although the urge to confront remains, we must carefully reflect to see an even greater contention—a biological, anthropomorphic universe which has submerged itself in carnal, beastly desires. This environmental unhealthiness has plagued our civilization since Adam's fall, straying us towards dilemmas which are, eventually, blamed on others (Genesis 3).

The greater engagement is of one which must occur within us. Instead of slipping towards further carnage and instability, allow the Father to succeed in his holy work—provide him access to cast away leviathan from our turbulent seas. He will win against the monstrous.

While many attempt to draw the beast out on a hook, our arrows alone cannot make him flee. Such a creature is “king over all the children of pride” (Job 41).

Rather than plotting such arrogant attempts, let us be silent in our ways and refrain.

The Father, alone, will stand.

Higher Ground

1/20/21

It is more than just a strategic or survivalist stance.

Before evil is plunged into the lava abyss, a saber must carefully be wielded to deliver the precise strike. This thrust, however, cannot be enacted with a passion of malice or hatred—it must be carried out with just demeanor, sincere lament, and faithful resolution.

Yes, faithful ones... we have been showered heavily with life's fiery embers. We have grown weary in this intimate, strenuous fight. Even still, we must remain the more focused—for with great position comes weighted accountability.

We must not stumble openly in the light.

Let us remember the story of Moshe, the deliverer who consistently pleaded for the people of Israel when they whined and faltered. Although they were given many opportunities to correct behavior, in Moshe's case it took only a blunder—frustratingly he hit the rock instead of speaking to it. As the consequence, he was personally denied the very Promised Land he sought after.

Although the stiff-necked and gullible are given leeway, the virtuous path remains narrow and difficult. Yes, mistakes are sometimes made—yet let us make them early on in our journey. Just as Moshe grew during the years of shepherding sheep, such an experience we should also retain.

Higher ground can be attained. Such ground, however, is never to be used for personal leverage. It is not used for prideful banter or lustful arrogance. Its advantage is only for the principled.

Only with uprightness will the approach succeed.

Stand

2/25/21

While it is time to kneel at the Father's feet, it is also time to stand against evil and its oppressions. Both actions pave the way to restoration and healing.

Today, we are eager to arouse our personal persuasions and observations—more faith is placed on perception than what is genuine. Because of this, our world has bolstered voices which do not provide substance in due season. Societal pressures, aiming to rid the masses of true conviction and constructive sense, have forced people into a conflicting cohesion. This, in turn, has brought an unbridled arrogance.

Look at what has happened with the structures of finance, communication, travel, science, and entertainment. It is all too apparent seeing the folly overtaking these establishments! Such foolishness could be avoided if we stood for the higher principle.

What we need is a steady foundation. By standing strong in the Father ways, we find a greater power—we are fashioned in complete and capable armor withstanding all schemes of the adversaries (Ephesians). His reign, clothed in strength, is eternal and cannot move (Psalms 93).

Massing great amounts of reeds does not alter the nature of its bending! A slew of ambiguous, inconsistent standards, moving whichever way the wind blows, will not save us in perilous waters.

Let us clear our dashboard and rejuvenate ourselves with sound and sure discernment.

Knowledge of Our Weakness

3/8/21

A strong message from Mikhael to be heeded:

“Blind are we, if creation of this clone army we could not see.”

The strong and wise in their towers were caught unaware of the trap set. Decades, if not hundreds of years, had the machinations been placed. Only after the deception, when it could no longer be avoided, did they finally begin to see.

Within their Temple they had the galaxy’s greatest archive of knowledge—thousands of the greatest warriors to ever live, along with loyal sentinels, research labs, educational systems, and intelligence networks. They were indeed formidable and masterful. Their Temple was indeed a light to all—a City upon a hill.

They looked to themselves and the power they possessed. They trained, they studied... they fought great battles and gained much success until the very end. It was at this end when all the vain glory was swept away.

They had lost their way in what mattered. Weakened and blinded, they came to not know their fate.

Unaware for so long were the mighty and blessed! Once the dark plan was in full effect, their fall took only a few years. The thief, coming upon them in an instant, eventually manifested their revenge. Dedicated achievements, regardless of galactic campaigns or distinctive decorations, meant nothing when faced by a trooper and his new Master.

Fallen and shamed, their prestigious pillars became the dwelling place of demons. All they had and had done was brought to nothing.

Then, when all was said and done, they were faced with two choices: comply or die. Yield did some—for it was easier, quicker. “Back to normal” was the sweet saying given to ease the stresses. Twisted they were into the inquisition... and worse.

How the mighty have fallen!

Think now Jedi learners—what do you know? Are you upon sand to be washed away in an instant... or upon the rock to stand in this life and to the next? If sand, it is time to confront this weakness.

The Knowing is all that matters.

Five Years of Jedihood

This person thought it necessary to reflect on Jedihood and its overall impact. Today, for instance, marks the fifth anniversary of the message.

It is very unusual for a message to survive such an isolated format as long as this one has. It was as if its strength came from its own isolation. Why? Still wonder how it has stood the test of time given the great exertion of energy it takes to perform it. After attempting to walk away from it twice (believing it to be completed each time), was called back in a fervor. What is its overall goal?

Jedihood exists, not as a statement of defiance, yet one of steadfastness. It purposely does not attempt to be popular by asserting promotive acts. In contrast, it asserts the viewer with doses of truth as if it was a piece of broccoli given to a discomforted child. Although the viewer at times shakes one's head in disgust, the healthy plant is not discarded.

When reading Scripture, the words speak on how the Light, in its holiest form, should not be discarded or ignored in the slightest. Although its character can make us feel uncomfortable at times—even with our taste buds at full disagreement—we should learn to surrender to its calling. We know the Provider is giving us what we need to grow and mature.

The Jedi in Star Wars actually teach a very similar moral. Although many cling to its glamorous and romantic sides, true guardians are very few and far between. As one has said to this person, it is as if the mysterious, humble monks were cheapened out of their existence. Instead of rare jewels... they were inwardly gutted and outwardly worn as a fashion statement.

This message though has said it the way it is, without compromise. The messenger respects the calling because of its steadfastness, even when stumbling at times in the performance. It is a stern reminder the Master comes in various forms—and, when we submit to being the Student, can learn from the Ancients.

Do appreciate the few who have continued to follow, even though silent. That's okay. It is time for all of us to do such.

It is time for the Master to speak.

Rise of the Separatists

4/4/2021

Some years ago, wrote about the Attack of the Clones. As Stormtroopers have been deployed in attempt to remove any resistance from their path, we see the surge of another faction...

A discontented conglomerate waits patiently to counterstrike. Appalled by excessive corruption within the Galactic Senate, combined with growing frustrations of independent sectors, these objectors seek alternate leadership and technologies to confront the ongoing menace.

Count Dooku, an outspoken enthusiast symbolizing past nobility, has left the Jedi Council due to its growing complacency and unwillingness to engage the corruption. Understanding the vitality of business and exchange, Dooku pursues both the Trade Federation and Commerce Guild, claiming to return representation to the oppressed systems. Outer-rim forces, determined to remain self-reliant, seek his influence to end the conflict.

The Separatists are patient yet grow weary. What will be their counter-offense? Will they create their own army?

While legions of Stormtroopers persistently advance with false aim, an ever-growing resistance hides within the caves of Geonosis. They are growing in number! An upcoming grievousness also appears to command its ranks.

Is seditious Sidious behind it all?

This is the story of today. Political and social tensions, having arisen from its own despotic soup, enrage the conflict even further with mindless melees, unwavering pride, and senseless bantering. A troubling unrest has resulted—we find heartlessness within a sea of anger. This will only enrage the beast.

Although today's Dooku may have noble intentions pursuing a worthy cause, let us not be so quick to overlook character. Only the high ground will prevail. With that said, the incompetence of our current Republic—especially towards the perverse—must be corrected.

In truth, it started with our own incompetence—it must end with the removal of such. If we do not resolve this now, a Dark Lord will eventually rise within us.
